SWEAT EQUITY

THIS MONTH, BOSTON WAS DUBBED the healthiest city in America for the second year running. OK, so this distinction was bestowed upon us by a company called NerdWallet, but the methodology seems fairly sound, drawing on our American Fitness Index score, CDC data on residents' weight and activity, our nation-leading levels of health insurance coverage and our ample ranks of physicians.

Of course, it doesn't hurt that we also have plenty of talented pros who help whip us into shape. Case in point: our Health & Beauty issue's cover story subjects, who've all launched new fitness ventures within the last year or so. From a doctor turned trainer to the founder of a nonprofit that teaches martial arts to underserved youth, they each share how they help others shape up while staying healthy themselves, tracking how they eat, sleep, work and exercise during the course of a typical day (which seems anything but typical to this fitness newb).

Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff interviews Lev Glazman, co-founder and number-one nose at Boston-bred fragrance and skin care brand Fresh. Scott Kearnan shadows local drag queen Katya—sure to be a fierce competitor on the upcoming season of RuPaul's Drag Race—during her beauty routine. Meghan Kavanaugh gets some tips from a local nail-art phenom. And I check in with a startup that's launching at the inaugural Boston Fitness Gala, whose founders have pledged to perform 10,000 burpees in the coming weeks. I think I'm going to try 10. Hope this issue provides some inspiration for you, too.

TIPS AND TRENDS FROM A MANICURE MAVEN

#NAILEDIT

GO NEGATIVE

Park predicts that playing up negative space on nails will break through as the most popular trend this spring—here are a few of her favorite DIY-friendly looks.

(On the previous page) Gray Lady Use a thin strip of tape to separate the gray from a bright pop of color—just pull it off before the polish dries.

Peachy Keen Who says tips should have all the fun? Try a half-moon mani in a ladylike pastel, using a small, thin brush for precise application.

On the Matte A mattifying top coat adds the finishing touch to this neon-meets-neutral design.

A Show of Hands

By day, she's Ms. Park, teaching English to 10th-graders at TechBoston Academy. By night, she's Elle L. Cool Jam, racing around a roller rink in the Boston Derby Dames league. But it's online where Nina Park earns the cred she needs to hang all day with teenagers. There, she's @NinaNailedIt, a nail art pro with more than 20,000 Instagram followers who have come to expect new swoon-worthy designs every week.

Park wakes up as early as 6:30 am on Saturdays to get to work, postponing grading essays in favor of a design routine that might seem Sisyphean if it weren't so enjoyable. She paints a week's worth of designs in a matter of hours. One intricate look featuring gold charms and turquoise marbling is painted, photographed and then wiped clean; next up could be a starry galaxy or even digits inspired by a cable-knit sweater. "Then I take them off and paint the final set that I'll wear for the week. Isn't that crazy?" she says. "It's a lot, but I think that painting my nails just kind of helps me relax from the week."

Art itself isn't new to the beauty guru; she took art classes growing up, "but nothing ever stuck." Bored of her go-to black nails, she taught herself nail art with the help of Pinterest and online tutorials. And now she's teaching others, with a workshop on floral and ombre nails planned for Jan. 22 at the North End's Savas Studios. "I love giving people tips and then having them come back and be like, 'Look what I've done!'" she says. "I want to see people with more nail art in Boston. I'm just ready for that." / Meghan Kavanaugh

EASY A

Park put together a lesson plan to help you nail a perfect set.

1. BUY CHEAP NAIL ART BRUSHES from eBay and trim them down to your taste.
2. PRACTICE WRITING THE ALPHABET WITH YOUR LESS-DOMINANT HAND to improve dexterity.
3. USE TOOTHPICKS, BOBBY PINS OR PENS to make dots.
4. UTILIZE ELMER'S GLUE around your cuticles to prevent polish from getting on your skin when making gradients.
5. DIP AN ANGLED EYEBROW BRUSH in pure acetone to clean up any stray polish around the cuticles.
6. DAB COCONUT OIL ON THE CUTICLES to give your nail art an even more Instagram-worthy shine. #nofilter

PAINT THE TOWN

Park had more than 200 bottles in her arsenal before she became sponsored by Sally Hansen, so it's safe to say she knows polish like the back of her hand. Here are a few she used to achieve these looks:

SALLY HANSEN PEACH OF CAKE

Thanks to its versatility, Park has gone through bottles of this hue, which is free of three of the most common toxins found in nail polish. // $8 at CVS

SMITH & CULT STOCKHOLM SYNDROME

This "five-free" polish can be worn on its own as a sleek neutral or paired with a bright color for a more chic finish. // $18 at Shag

CULT HERMOSA BEACH

This toxin-free, vegan-friendly polish from California carries a one-coat guarantee. // $10 at cultcosmetics.com

SWEET TWEETS: Blackbird keeps it simple with its decor and a menu of just doughnuts and coffee.

ACE IN THE HOLE

THE GALLOWS GROUP GOES ALL-IN FOR DOUGHNUTS.

Blackbird Doughnuts
492 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9000)
blackbirddoughnuts.com

Rebecca Roth Gullo and Seth Yaffe work in the same restaurant and live blocks away from each other. But it took them traveling separately nearly 1,000 miles to Chicago to hatch the idea for Blackbird, the Gallows Group's doughnut and coffee shop slated to open this month in the South End.

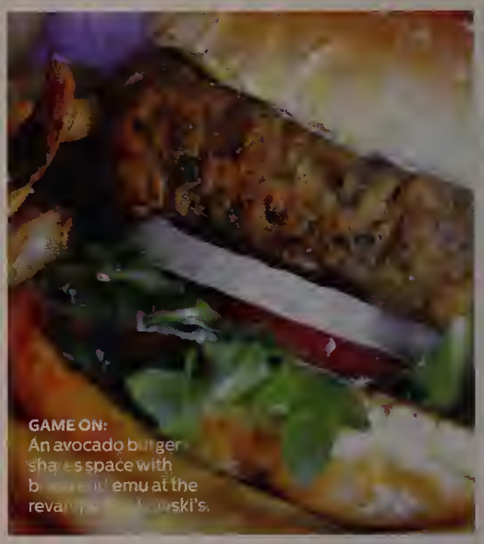
In the spring of 2013, owner Gullo stopped by the Doughnut Vault in Chicago, a couple of months after COO Yaffe had made the trek. Customers have been known to line up before sunrise to grab a round treat from the famed shop, which often sells out.

"I got a phone call from [Gullo] saying, 'Oh my God, this is the best thing I've ever eaten. Guess what, we're opening a doughnut shop,'" Yaffe says. "For me, it was life changing. Doughnuts around here were Dunkin' Donuts, or once in a while you'd go to a bakery that was doing other things but happened to have a doughnut there."

Ahead of what would become a national craze for the pastry, the group soon started adding doughnuts to the Gallows menu and visiting other shops and bakeries to get a better feel for the breakfast staple.

Memories of those visits prompted a last-second design change mere days before Cafco Construction started the project in November. Out went the books and curios, part of an initial plan inspired by the Rose Main Reading Room in the New York Public Library, in favor of a simpler aesthetic befitting a takeout bakery. Think lots of white tile, a rusted-metal menu board with magnetic letters above the ordering counter and a birdcage chandelier that nods to the Blackbird name, which in turn evokes the Gallows' logo. And the doughnut-making will be on full display beyond a glass wall.

"It's not cluttered now. Originally you weren't going to see the bakery, but then we felt, we're building such a cool bakery, and the equipment is all brand-new except for one piece," Gullo says. "You might as well see it."



There will be eight to 12 kinds of doughnuts available each day, including both cake and raised varieties. The vanilla glaze and a stack of mini doughnuts (available in threes) will always be on hand, but the rest will change with the season and the kitchen's whim. Flavors that have struck a chord so far: toffee, Sriracha glaze with sesame seeds, chips and French onion dip (inspired by Yaffe's obsession with chips and dip), lemon honey pistachio and even sourdough. To start, the shop is expected to be open Thursday through Sunday, from 7 am to mid-afternoon, but the group plans to eventually serve seven days a week, fill wholesale orders and even dabble in mobile projects.

For now, the concept remains simple. Doughnuts and a custom blend of coffee from a local roaster are all that customers will be able to order, but that might not be the case for long.

"Right now, it's just doughnuts, but we love soft serve," Gullo says, dropping a hint with a big smile. "I love soft serve. Seth loves soft serve."

AUTHORING A NEW CHAPTER

GAME ON: An avocado burger shares space with bison and emu at the revamped Bukowski's.

There are more than a dozen signature burgers on the menu at Cambridge's reopened Bukowski Tavern, including bison with sorachi-Sriracha ketchup and duck with truffle-rosemary cream. But chef/owner Brian Poe, a renowned game lover, says his favorite dish contains no meat at all. It's "Chip and Dip," a vegan variation of the dish that features celery root and cauliflower chips and creamed kefir-cauliflower sauce. "My joke was, 'If you want to make a dish bad, call it vegetarian!'" Poe says.

Fear not, carnivores. Meatballs made of kangaroo and emu are in the works, and a trio of "game dogs"—bison, venison and gator spiced with andouille sausage—should prove popular in the extensively renovated space.

"Oh, we just tidied it up," Poe says, downplaying the aesthetic of the sleek industrial design. "We didn't want to make it too nice."

Poe, who's partnering with the Wilcox Hospitality Group on the refreshed Inman Square favorite, is especially enthusiastic about combining beer and food in unexpected ways. Two salads are dressed with beer vinaigrette (Cascade hop and whit beer), which was a challenge because cooking down the beer produced a strong taste of nickel. Now, Poe adds hops to a vinegar mix, resulting in incredible beer flavor. "You can do more [with beer] than a Guinness chili," he says.

INTO THE WOODS

Out in West Concord, diners will have to wait till at least February for Woods Hill Table to open its doors in the former West Concord Supermarket space. Executive chef Charlie Foster (formerly executive chef at Daniel Boulud's DBGB in Manhattan) is developing a menu that includes housemade sausages, pates and pastas—and french fries prepared in grass-fed beef tallow, served with the Woods Hill Table burger, topped with tomato preserves and Gruyere.

OCTO-STRONG: The mat's shape is designed to help keep athletes centered.

A VERY WELCOME MAT

Local triathlete Justin Mendelson recently set a new fitness goal: 100 burpees to start his day. So he pulled out a yoga mat one morning to get started. It didn't go well. "My hands were hanging off the sides; I slipped a few times once I got a little sweaty," he says. "I tried it again a few days later with shoes on, and I kind of shredded the mat." As the founder of the Hackfit coding series, Mendelson was no stranger to fitness-focused entrepreneurship—so when he couldn't find the right mat for high-intensity training, he set out to create one. "I said, somebody should make a mat that's perfect for burpees, because if it's perfect for burpees, it would be perfect for any kind of training."

The result is Perfect Burpee, a larger mat made from natural rubber coated with a no-slip nanoparticle-infused material and shaped like a stretched-out octagon. "During testing, we found that when athletes are given diagonal boundaries, it helps them stay centered," Mendelson explains. The mats will be priced at around $100, but early supporters can get them for $60 via Perfect Burpee's $20,000 Kickstarter campaign, launching on Jan. 14 at the first Boston Fitness Gala. "We're saying to athletes in Boston, get out of your fitness attire, get into nice dresses and suits for once and get to know one another," Mendelson says of the free event, which will bring Bollywood- and parkour-inspired dance performances and speakers such as triathlon hall of famer Karen Smyers to District Hall.

Also beginning at the sold-out gala: a challenge for Mendelson and business partner David Gritz, who've pledged to perform 10,000 burpees over 30 and 60 days, respectively. "I'm a pretty avid triathlete and weight lifter, and David essentially never worked out," Mendelson explains. "He said, 'I want to do this for people like me who've never been fit before but who've always wanted to be.'" Mendelson hopes Perfect Burpee will appeal to both ends of the fitness spectrum. "The product is really built for athletes, but it can be used by anybody who wants to work out in their living rooms. That's what we're really excited about: allowing people to get unhooked from the really expensive gym membership and unleash their fitness wherever, whenever." / Jacqueline Houton

SPICE AS NICE: Cilantro's fish with chili sauce makes for a flavorful meal.

Good Eats: Go Fish!

For those still mourning the shuttered Thailand Cafe, Kendall Square's mismarked haven for solid Sichuan food that closed in 2013, there's renewed hope farther up Mass. Ave. At Cilantro, a Harvard Square newcomer that undersells its expertise with Sichuan dishes, the fish fillet with spicy chili sauce is particularly good: a vat of silky fish fillets and just-tender green cabbage submerged in a thick broth laced with dried chilies, Sichuan peppercorns and the unmistakable savory depth of chili broad bean paste. Don't forget the rice. / Elizabeth Bomze

REVOLUTION MAN

Michael Raymond-James has played everything from a serial killer in HBO's True Blood to Rumpelstiltskin's son in ABC's Once Upon a Time. He takes on a very real role as Poul Revere in the History Channel's three-part mini-series Sons of Liberty. As Boston's own famed midnight rider, he joins fellow revolutionaries Sam Adams, John Adams, John Hancock and Joseph Warren as they make history. We checked in with the actor before the Jan. 25 premiere. / Alexandra Cavallo

I THINK REVERE WAS SORT OF A BADASS—IS THAT HOW YOU DECIDED TO PLAY HIM? Revere was a badass. So that wasn't a decision for me to make; it was there in the writing, as well as the annals of our history. Most of Revere's life, however, is overshadowed by the single event of his ride to Lexington, which is unfortunate.

HISTORY CAN BE A BIT DRY. SONS OF LIBERTY LOOKS ANYTHING BUT... I personally love history. To me, math is dry and boring. These were incredibly tense times, with so much at stake, and we tried to capture the tension, the dangers and the passion of those times as best we could. The result is a pretty wild ride.

THE SHOW WAS FILMED IN ROMANIA, BUT YOU WERE IN BOSTON RECENTLY, FILMING THE FINEST HOURS. DID YOU VISIT PAUL REVERE'S HOUSE? I haven't yet had the chance ... but that's something I absolutely will be doing at some point. I did take a day to visit Lexington. I wanted to stand there on Lexington Green and try to imagine what those men and boys must have been feeling there, waiting while the sounds of the British drums and the marching of the British boots approached. It must have been absolutely harrowing. Same for the wives, mothers and sisters in town—an excruciating sense of dread. But ... it was more important to take that stand. It gives me chills.

IF YOU COULD GO BACK IN TIME AND MEET ANY HISTORICAL FIGURE, WHO'D IT BE? The complete list would be too long to print—long enough to fill the old Boston Garden. I would love to hang with Paul Revere at The Green Dragon and discuss operations over a few pints of lager.

Drink of the Moment

LADY JAYE

STODDARD'S
48 Temple Place, Boston
(617-426-0048)

PRICE: $11

INVENTOR: Stoddard's bartender Jonathan Buonomo

INGREDIENTS: Salers, Bärenjäger and lemon juice, topped with pinot noir.

TASTE: Made with gentian root, the French aperitif Salers has bittersweet notes. As for the honey liqueur, Buonomo says, "I wanted to add a little sweetness [while] adding a little booze. Salers is pretty low proof, [and] I didn't want to make that wimpy of a drink." The acidity of fresh lemon juice brings balance.

BEND THE RULES: Sure, there are plenty of sparkling wine cocktails, but Buonomo wondered, "Who wrote the rule? Why can't you make a wine cocktail?"

WHAT'S IN A NAME: "I grew up watching a lot of cartoons, [including] G.I. Joe," Buonomo says. If he had to guess, Lady Jaye, the undercover specialist born on Martha's Vineyard, would order this drink. "She was a badass."

PAIR IT WITH: "Anything with mushrooms," or a vegetarian option. Buonomo suggests the root vegetable salad ($10), with carrots, beets, fennel and oranges.

GETTIN' CRAFTY: The Downtown Crossing gastropub, a former late-19th-century corset store, focuses on craft beer, which Buonomo learned quite a bit about while tending bar at Bronwyn. "But we do honor that type of cocktail here as well," he says. Drinkers will find three sections on their menu: Classics, tiki concoctions and contemporaries "where we get a little loose and get funky, let our personalities show."

HIS PERSONAL MANTRA: "Try not to be too flashy, [though] there's a time and place for that too." / Sarah Hagman

HEARTS OF DARKNESS

THE LOCAL AUTHOR OF HOUSE OF SAND AND FOG AND TOWNIE TURNS TO THOUGHTS OF LOVE.

Dirty Love* by Andre Dubus III
Published by W.W. Norton & Company, 292 pages, $15

EACH PARTNER IN A COUPLE HAS A PRIVATE experience of the relationship—secret feelings that fuel this collection of four novellas. In the first, "Listen Carefully as Our Options Have Changed," Mark hires a private detective to capture his wife's affair on video, and as he watches Laura lit up by love, he also sees himself in a disturbing new light. His own tawdry dalliance doesn't help matters, and the story ends on a cliff-hanging moment of possible violence.

Next, in "Marla," a lonely bank employee moves in with the tightly contained Dennis, but his house becomes an echo chamber as she wonders what love should be and whether she's managed to feel it. Then there's "The Bartender," whose namesake is a would-be poet cheating on his pregnant wife; when she discovers his affair, her suddenly ferocious assault on the mistress brings on early labor. And in the longest tale, "Dirty Love," the troubled Devon goes to live with her kind, sad great-uncle, her main protector, after explicit pictures of her ricochet through the Internet, leaving her so humiliated that her only other "real" intimacy comes from Skyping with a stranger.

Dubus' stream-of-consciousness sentences stretch out achingly, with both sympathy and ambivalence toward his characters. Dirtiness is everywhere here, but so is the painful search for love.

FROM PAGE 167: Devon just wanted to put her headphones on and make the whole place the background of her world, just a crowded carpeted bad dream she had to move through that smelled like perfume and shrimp scampi and sweat. But Danny Sullivan didn't allow headphones or iEverythings on the floor (or her nose stud or more than one in each ear), and Devon had to work those nights with her insides never matching her outsides... ◆

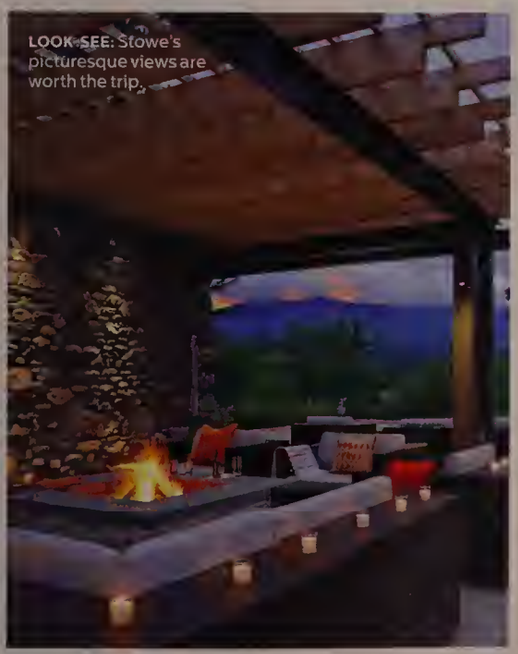
STOWE AWAY

TOPNOTCH RESORT IS A MOUNTAINTOP SHANGRI-LA.

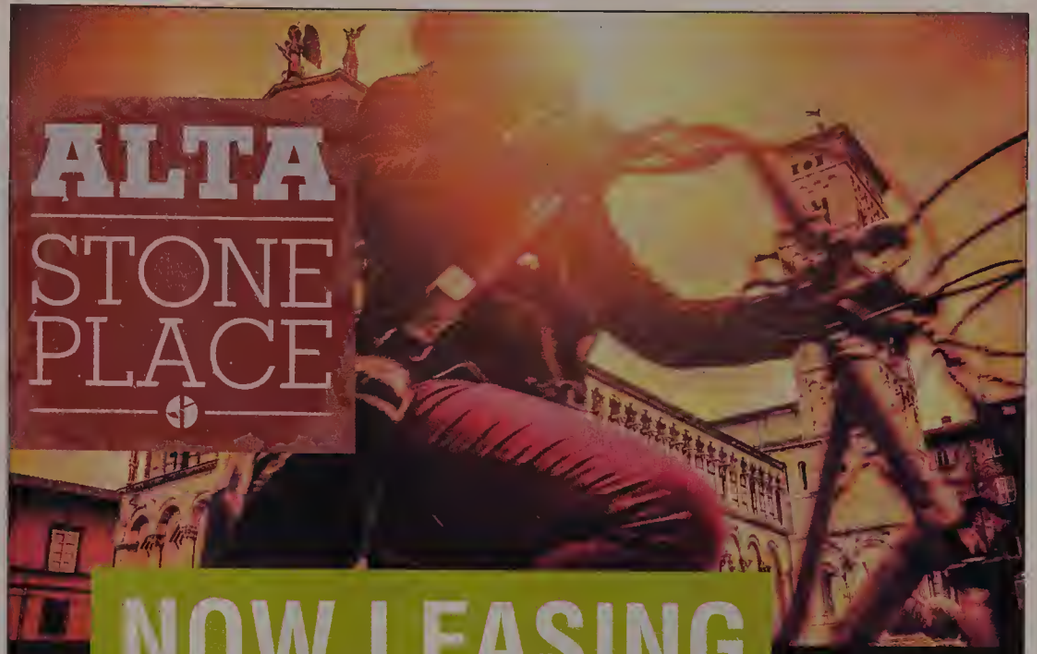
LIKE TOLSTOY'S HAPPY FAMILIES, SKI resort communities are alike. They all have art galleries, expensive sandwich shops and an astonishing number of Subarus. Stowe, Vermont, embodies this rule to a tee, but its Topnotch Resort stands out for a standard of service usually associated with Edwardian manors, except with more smiling. It's also got a spa good enough to merit the drive from Boston, if Vermont's most picturesque ski area wasn't reason enough.

The town of Stowe has plentiful countrified distractions: dog-friendly inns, white spired churches and something called a "House of Jerky." Hang a left on the road that winds up Mount Mansfield, and the family restaurants and ski rental stores crowd thick until you feel the elevation in your ear canals. Topnotch roosts on a slope about a 10-minute drive from the base of the ski lifts. From the modern chalet architecture of the main hotel, it unfolds into banks of condominiums that command views and seasonal rental rates best described as arresting. For smaller groups, book a room in the hotel and check your gear with the ski valets at the bottom of the driveway. They'll keep your boots warm and dry—and even supply you with Pop Tarts for a caloric boost after a day on the piste.



Rooms here are ski resort luxe, meaning they're warm and outfitted for good storage, with pale wood and simple lines. An executive king on the third floor will sport vaulted cathedral ceilings for airiness. But the real attraction of the hotel is the spa area, which boasts an indoor lap pool and a whirlpool with a hydrotherapy waterfall. Sit under it for a vigorous shoulder and neck massage without the spa pricing. An outdoor pool area is open year-round, with heated swimming and a scalding hot tub ideal for winter nights or crisp mornings with a view of the mountains. Fire bowls dot the property, inflecting the rawest night with a balmy flicker.

Complimentary shuttles are on call at all hours, so you can be first in line for the lifts and last down the slopes at sunset. Stowe justifiably calls itself the ski capital of the East, and Topnotch's concierge will arrange for discounted lift tickets. Rentals are available on property at the resort's Nordic Barn, which also offers sleigh rides through the wooded trails across the Mountain Road. And there's an expansive tennis center with world-class pros on staff and indoor facilities for winter play. The hotel's fitness schedule is expansive, too, ranging from gentle yoga to Pilates for skiers.



Topnotch's diversions aren't all so high-energy—the après bar, the Roost, has mountain views, fireplaces and excellent local drafts like Switchback. Every bar in Vermont seems to serve a medley of outstanding cheeses, but the Roost broadens its snack menu with fun concoctions like short rib poutine and beer and cheddar soup with bacon. A shuffleboard table keeps kids entertained while their parents study the cocktail list, and there's frequent live music and karaoke—the staff may even take a turn on the microphone. The hotel's main restaurant, Flannel, is a bistro with an open kitchen and an emphasis on Vermont flavors with a creative edge. The lacquered pork belly, for example, is touched with spiced maple syrup and smoked butternut squash. Solid mains like rib-eye with thyme marsala sauce or chipotle orange-glazed duck breast get a boost from knockout sides like crispy Brussels sprouts with Sriracha aioli or french fries with powdered Gruyere. Be sure to book the breakfast plan with your room; bracing dishes like corned beef hash with runny eggs or challah French toast with Grand Marnier custard can be delivered to your bedside.

After so much gastronomic exertion, you'll be ready for another day on the mountain. The beauty of Topnotch is that the staff packs your skis, delivers you to the slopes and brings you back to the hydrotherapy waterfall afterward. They eliminate the logistical trauma of a ski vacation, making it effortless. The only worry is what to order on the après menu. ◆

RIVER'S EDGE

RIVER BAR UPENDS MEDIOCRE MALL-FOOD STEREOTYPES.

RIVER BAR
661 Assembly Row, Somerville (617-616-5561)
river-bar.com

IF YOU HAVE ANY FOND MEMORIES OF MALL dining, I expect they're from your childhood, when your family or fellow teenagers were happy to patronize dull casual-dining outlets and middling food-court franchises. The restaurant options at Somerville's new Assembly Row outlet mall don't look much different: There's an Earls (think Canadian Cheesecake Factory) and local chain versions of seafood, Mexican, ice cream and pizza—convenient, certainly, but hardly destination dining. So I expect locals to be surprised and delighted by River Bar, which breaks the mold of mall restaurants with some fun, fresh ideas.

First off, there's the space, an airy glass box that seats 36 indoors at a bar, a kitchen bar and some tables, with views of the nearby Mystic River throughout. More impressive is the 123-seat patio with its own bar, more water views and two fire pits that threw enough heat on a recent sub-freezing night to keep some big parties happily out-of-doors. Then there's chef Patrick Gilmartin, whose love of Asian street food made his bygone Staff Meal food truck one of the most interesting and tasty in Boston. Add Jess Willis' bar program, aiming democratically at cocktail nerds, beer geeks and less adventurous drinkers, and you might start forgetting you're surrounded by discount footwear shops.

As the name suggests, River Bar is foremost a bar, with three dozen beers and ciders focusing on Northeastern U.S. craft brewers but offering some global range. Cisco Grey Lady ($6.50 can), a gently funky witbier from Nantucket, Maine's Baxter Pamola Xtra, a mild American pale ale ($5 can), and Verhaeghe Duchesse de Bourgogne ($12 bottle), an intriguingly complex, sour Flanders red ale, are representative of the list's nerdy-but-accessible focus. The tight, affordable wine list of 20 bottles ($32-$96, most under $55), 14 of them available by the glass ($8-13), includes seafood-friendly whites like the stony 2013 Michel Delhommeau Muscadet Sèvre et Maine Sur Lie ($9 glass, $36 bottle) and richer reds such as the velvety 2009 Château Peyros Tannat ($12 glass, $44 bottle), a respectable budget Bordeaux. The specialty cocktail list shows admirable craft and love of lesser-known bitters, as in the herbally rich The Hollow Men ($11), with rye, Cynar, Cocchi Rosa, Becherovka and Yellow Chartreuse, or the Autumn Still ($10), with bourbon and the weird-but-good caraway accent of kümmel, plus Averna and Angostura bitters. The lovely lavender Eagle's Dream ($12) creamily combines gin, crème de violette, egg white and lemon, while the toddy-ish Mind Glow ($10) of rye, cinnamon-y Bittermens Hiver Amer, lemon and honey is a radiant winter warmer.

The short food menu centers on snacks to complement an evening of leisurely drinking, like a dish of Togarashi almonds ($7) amply dusted with salt and Japanese chili powder, superb housemade tapioca-based shrimp chips ($7) with mild black-garlic aioli for dipping and gastropub-worthy Nelly's pickles ($4) of cucumber, carrot and asparagus. More substantial shareable plates include the venerable British pub stalwart Scotch eggs ($9), here a deep-fried quail egg surrounded by mild chorizo. Grilled corn ($8) reduces the delectable messiness of Mexican elotes by taking it off the cob. Corned beef and cabbage dumplings ($9) show Gilmartin's fusion-y truck-food legacy at its best, filling three beautifully browned potstickers with otherworldly housemade corned beef, accompanied by a rye dipping sauce I'd happily drink by the mug. Chicken and brie terrine ($10) reflects his fine-dining chops in a subtly flavored bit of charcuterie. Gratineed littlenecks ($13) with cider and Gruyere are simple, fresh and fine, prettily adorned with the chef's favorite garnish: Korean chili threads, dried and thinly shredded capsicum chilies as slender and vibrant as saffron.

More substantial plates include a whole redfish ($21) grilled with great skill to just-pinkness by the spine and simply dressed with strips of preserved lemon. Another bit of flawless cookery is evident in a juicy, crisp-skinned roasted Vadouvan half chicken ($22). The grilled housemade Chinese sausage sub ($13) recalls a fat, tender bratwurst more than Staff Meal's famous soppressata-like cured sausage; it's delicious enough to merit the price tag. A special of "spaghetti" and meatballs ($13) builds on excellent veal/beef/pork meatballs in a bright tomato sauce, then adds textural interest through the use of housemade ramen noodles instead of Western pasta. It's the kind of fun dish that Gilmartin does best, inveigling timid eaters down interesting paths through nifty combinations of the familiar and less so. With his kind of kicky, drink-friendly food, the terrific bar program, a new Orange Line stop nearby and especially that spectacular patio in warmer weather, River Bar ought to draw throngs of locals, including the sort who don't care if they do any outlet shopping at all. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: MY SKIN IS SO DRY THAT IT FEELS LIKE IT IS GOING TO CRACK. WHAT CAN I DO IN ADDITION TO USING MOISTURIZER?

A: In the winter our skin needs more hydration than usual and becomes dried out from the wind and cold weather, as well as low humidity due to indoor heating. Moisturizers are only part of the solution.

When our skin is dry there is usually a layer of dead skin cells that need to be gently exfoliated. If the skin is not exfoliated, moisturizers will not be able to penetrate to provide hydration.

Integrating a high-quality glycolic acid product into your skin care regime will provide the exfoliation you need to dissolve the dead skin cells, as would a gentle chemical peel or other exfoliation treatment with your skin care professional.

A gentle facial with a mask or hydrosonic skin therapy are also excellent ways to enhance hydration and sooth your skin to combat the harsh winter weather.

AMERICAN SNIPER* ★★★

Starring Bradley Cooper, Sienna Miller, Kyle Gallner, Cole Konis, Ben Reed, Elise Robertson, Luke Sunshine, Keir O'Donnell, Mido Hamada, Jake McDorman and Sammy Sheik. Written by Jason Hall, based on the book by Chris Kyle, Scott McEwen and James DeFelice. Directed by Clint Eastwood. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and Somerville.

Movies / Brett Michel

FILM THE LEGEND

CLINT EASTWOOD SHOOTS AND KILLS WITH BRADLEY COOPER.

We first view Chris Kyle in American Sniper as he's staring down the scope of his sniper rifle at an Iraqi insurgent: a little boy holding a deadly grenade. As Chris trains his sights on this young killer, who can't be more than 7 or 8 years old, director Clint Eastwood cuts to Chris as a child in Texas, shooting a deer during an inaugural hunt with his dad. "That was one hell of a shot," Wayne Kyle (Ben Reed) tells his son. "You got a gift."

As the boy (Cole Konis) excitedly rushes toward his first kill, his father admonishes him. "Get back here! Don't ever leave your rifle in the dirt."

"Yes, sir," replies the good little soldier.

Over dinner, the God-fearing Wayne delivers some of the more heavy-handed dialogue in Jason Hall's script, which he's adapted from Chris Kyle's 2012 book, American Sniper: The Autobiography of the Most Lethal Sniper in U.S. Military History.

"There are three types of people in this world: sheep, wolves and sheepdogs," the proselytizing patriarch tells Chris and his black-eyed younger brother, Jeff (Luke Sunshine), as their mother, Debby (Elise Robertson), sits silently at the table. "Some people prefer to believe that evil doesn't exist in the world. Those are the sheep."

As the boys' father continues sermonizing in the voiceover, Eastwood cuts to earlier in the day, when a bully was beating Jeff up. "There are those who've been blessed with the gift of aggression and the overpowering need to protect the flock," Wayne notes as Eastwood shifts his camera to focus on Chris as he sprints to Jeff's aid, pulling the bully off his brother and repeatedly punching him in the face. "These men are the rare breed who live to confront the wolf. They are the sheepdog. And if someone tries to fight you, and tries to bully your little brother? You have my permission to finish it. Did you finish it?"

Chris nods, and Eastwood cuts to the outside of a barn at night. Wayne concludes, "Well, then you know who you are," as an older Chris—no longer a boy—emerges from the barn, dressed in denim, his face obscured by a white cowboy hat. He raises his head, and we see that he's now played by Bradley Cooper. "You know your purpose."

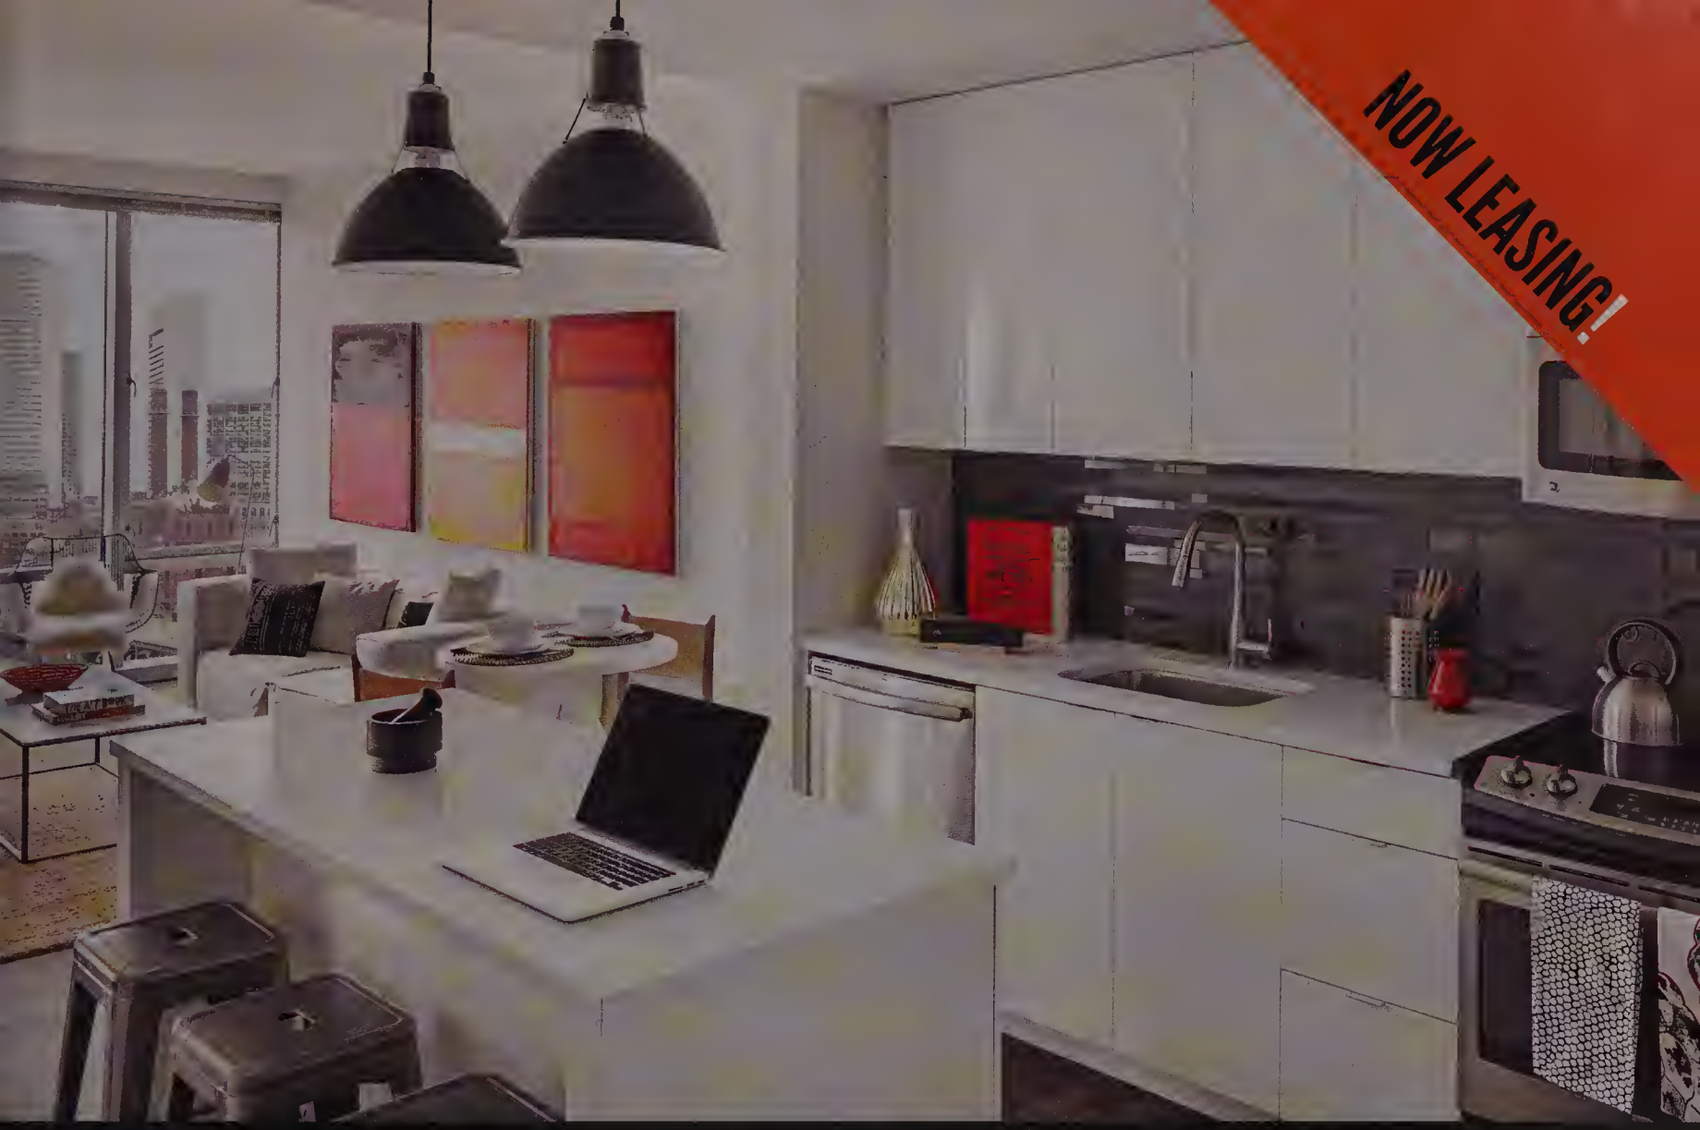
We've grown used to Cooper as a comic performer, but Eastwood recognized something deeper.

This sheepdog finds a place for his purpose when he joins the Navy. During a break in his SEAL training in California, Chris and his future bride, Taya (Sienna Miller, strong in an underwritten, weepy role), meet cute at a bar as he holds her hair back while she vomits. On their wedding day, Taya spots camouflage paint under his ear during their dance at the reception. It's soon after the horrors of 9/11, and his work is never far behind; he's called for service that day, heading to a solitary honeymoon in Iraq.

A trigger is pulled as Eastwood cuts back to that Iraqi boy as Chris' bullet rips through the child's chest. This will stand as the first of an unmatched 160 confirmed kills spread across four tours of duty, earning him the nickname "The Legend."

Eastwood is a firm believer in archetypes; he inflates a character who's mentioned in a single paragraph of the memoir—a Syrian sniper (Sammy Sheik)—into a nemesis who might as well wear a black hat to counter the white one Cooper wore earlier. And why not? American Sniper is another one of Eastwood's Westerns, transported to the present, with training scenes recalling his 1986 effort, Heartbreak Ridge.

The Kyles' marriage could also use some basic training, since it's mostly contained to long-distance phone calls. But they nevertheless manage to produce two children—children nearly left fatherless by one incredibly tense sequence. Pinned down on yet another rooftop perch as a dustbowl rages, Chris believes the end is near as insurgents close in. Phoning Taya for what may be the last time, he tells her, "I'm ready, baby. I'm ready to come home."



Chris miraculously survives, but he's wounded, and the scene ends on a shot of his rifle, abandoned in the swirling dirt. He's done. But the film isn't.

We've grown used to Cooper as a comic performer, but Eastwood recognized something deeper; the actor masterfully projects the effects of post-traumatic stress disorder with subtle changes in breathing and body language. Witness Chris facing the possibility of having to shoot yet another child, a boy roughly the same age as his own son, and then marvel at Cooper's range.

Returning stateside, Chris sits alone at a bar; "The Legend" can't bring himself to face his family. Speaking on the phone with him one more time, Taya suddenly realizes: "Wait—you're home?"

"I just needed a minute," he stammers, before finally breaking down. The rest of the film settles into the familiar rhythms of PTSD dramatizations found in superior pictures like Kathryn Bigelow's Best Picture winner, 2008's The Hurt Locker. But this film has few places left to go. History, however, would provide ironic closure. Chris Kyle was gunned down by another PTSD sufferer, a Marine he was trying to help—an incident Eastwood only alludes to, letting the screen fade to black as a legend is lost to fate.

The film's taken heat from some quarters for its perceived endorsement of 'Merica's war machine. Sure, there's much flag-waving during the newsreel footage of the real Kyle's funeral that runs under the end credits, but this is Eastwood at his most apolitical, no matter what chair he prefers talking to. ◆ plays House of Blues on Jan. 26.

Music / Paul Robicheau

WORTH THE WAIT

A ROCKY ROAD DOESN'T DERAIL THE DYNAMIC SINGER OF A BREAKOUT BAND.

If Hannah Reid wasn't centering London Grammar with sweeping, emotive vocals over the British trio's stark, atmospheric electro-pop, the singer imagines that she'd become a psychoanalyst.

"My writing is all about that really, about psychology and the human condition, and a stream of consciousness as well," says Reid, 25. "There are songs where I don't even know what I meant at the time, and I look back and interpret it a different way."

That's the case with the brooding, introspective material from London Grammar's debut, If You Wait, released last spring in the U.S. "I never thought anyone would ever hear it, so it really is just a window into my soul," Reid says from London as the band slowly works on a follow-up album. "I just hope that now, when things are slightly different, I can still find a way of being that open."

Reid's head has been spinning since If You Wait topped the U.K. charts in late 2013, catapulting the group into the international spotlight. London Grammar hits House of Blues on Jan. 26 as part of a U.S. tour postponed from last fall, she says, due to recording commitments and exhaustion from the road.

Reid, in particular, has worked to overcome the pressures of touring, which have included muscular strain on her larynx as well as stage anxiety, which she's suffered from since youth.

"I had maybe dreamt of being an actress, but I stopped being in plays and things like that because I had terrible stage fright," Reid says. She only got back in front of audiences after guitarist Dan Rothman drafted her to start a band while they were attending Nottingham University, and they enlisted fellow student Dominic "Dot" Major to complete London Grammar on drums, keyboards and percussion. As they shot from small bars to festivals, Reid's cool confidence at the microphone belied the extent of her nerves. "It is something I constantly work on," she says, "but it does make me very tired, being nervous all the time."

Reid credits Emotional Freedom Techniques, which tap energy points on the body with fingers instead of the needles from acupuncture. "Performing was like a phobia, and I was able to reduce it into a manageable fear and anxiety before I go on. And EFT definitely helped," she says. "I think it definitely relaxes you and makes you feel more positively."

"There are songs where I don't even know what I meant at the time, and I look back and interpret it a different way."

Reid certainly soars in London Grammar, from trip-hop ballad "Strong" to standout "Wasting My Young Years," which recalls the club-thumping shifts of "Help Me Lose My Mind," a track on electronic duo Disclosure's 2013 album Settle that introduced many people to London Grammar.

The trio's disparate influences span Fleetwood Mac, the Doors and Radiohead as well as the xx, the moody electronic group to which London Grammar is often compared, partly because of Rothman's skeletal guitar lines. "It's just a compliment, really," Reid says. "We are in a sort of post-xx era."

With her dramatic vocal range and stately classical-folk shadings, Reid also reminds one of Florence Welch of Florence + the Machine, though she cites old-school influences. "My mum always listened to Motown and all the big singers," she says, naming Tina Turner, Michael Jackson, Sinéad O'Connor and Adele among her inspirations.

"All three of us are very different people and have very different tastes for music," Reid says of her band. That led to friction in recording If You Wait, which, ironically, took 18 months to finish, with a sparse approach winning out. "There were arguments, sometimes over songs, but after that tension always came the right song," she says. "We're best friends."

It's been a long time since the three musicians made If You Wait, yet Reid still doesn't share many details about the follow-up, saying they have "just ideas" at this point. "We haven't made any decisions about what we want it to sound like," the singer says during her break for the holidays. "The second album will be different in certain ways. I think it will be less quiet at moments. It'll have more highs than lows." ◆

LET'S SLEEP ON IT

A MATTER OF MATTRESSES.

FOR MOST OF YOUR FORMATIVE YEARS, you probably slept on a mattress that was basically a tarp stuffed with rags. And you slept just fine. In college, I could happily doze till noon atop the standard-issue dorm mattress, a plastic-coated beige slab that probably dated to the Eisenhower administration. Until age 21, it never occurred to me that a mattress should be anything but a buffer between your body and the floor. The popularity of the futon speaks to the mindset of college students—you expect so little of a mattress that you don't even care if it moonlights as an entirely different piece of furniture.

But then you get a job and an apartment, and suddenly it seems like buying a real mattress is the grownup thing to do. Thus you're ushered into the world of perpetual mattress discontent.

The biggest problem, as I see it, is that bedding preferences are hugely subjective, which renders reviews essentially useless. Some people hate every bed they've ever had, while others could happily sleep on a pile of broken glass. I have a friend from Maine who says that during his military training, he learned to saw a log in half lengthwise, tilt the two sides into a vee and sleep on that. Which he did, for two weeks. "It keeps you out of the mud," he says cheerfully. Yes, but let me tell you about my problems with mattresses that are way too soft.

Eight years ago, Heather and I bought our first mattress. We learned that lying on a mattress in the store isn't the same as sleeping on it, for our pillow-top mattress soon developed body-shaped dents on either side, bisected by a mountain range of stuffing where the pillow top formed a muffin top. Sometimes I would don crampons and climbing gear, scale the summit and bring news from east of the divide, the Valley of the Clock Radio Side.

We stuck with that monstrosity for two or three years, sleeping in our shallow graves and awaiting the day when we'd feel we'd gotten our money's worth. When we finally steeled ourselves for another purchase, we at least knew to avoid the muffin top. This time we got the latest in cutting-edge slumber tech: memory foam, aka the waterbed of the new millennium.

Memory foam is superior to springs because the foam more evenly distributes your regret. And of that, we had plenty. Quicksand has more support than this mattress. They call it memory foam because you'll never forget how much money you spent on a piece of foam.

At least with an inner-spring mattress, the sales guy can justify its price by saying, "Well, there are all those springs in there; they're hand-pocketed and laser-calibrated, and each one is bench-tested for optimal body-weight diffraction across the entire surface spectrum." But foam? They give it to you free in packages. It's plastic and air. A memory foam mattress should cost $35, tops. Ours was more like $1,000, a sum that once again forced us to stick with it for three years to amortize our self-loathing.

Which brings us to our next mattress. I decided to surprise Heather for her birthday, so I bought another set without input from the other person who'd be sleeping on it. This is what's known in the mattress game as the ol' bad idea. About two weeks after I bought it, she declared, "I hate to say this, but I think I want a softer mattress." Fortunately, the store offered a 100-day exchange period, and soon enough we were pulling the sheets over our third mattress in three months. Hopefully this one—the Beautyrest Greenwood Firm, if you're interested—is here to stay. We'd better keep this sucker until it looks like it belongs in a motel in Saugus. By the time we get rid of this thing, I want it to be 90 percent skin and 10 percent dust mites. That's my ambition.

We'd better keep this sucker until it looks like it belongs in a motel in Saugus.

While we've finally found a mattress that we like, I don't feel much wiser about the process. I still couldn't tell you why some mattresses cost $6,000, and I still don't understand what a box spring does. I don't know what happened to the mattress we returned, and I don't know what a California king is, even though I think that's what we have.

I did learn to buy established brands from established stores. Do buy an inner-spring Beautyrest from Mattress Firm; do not buy a foam International Dawn Elite from a place that occasionally features gun battles between the owner and would-be robbers (this actually happened and definitely dissuaded me from stopping by to ask about the warranty). And don't spend too much money. Remember, you used to sleep just fine on a futon. You've probably had a great nap in a hammock. And if the Greenwood Firm doesn't work out, I'm gonna saw a log in half and call it a night. ◆

Soroff On / Lev Glazman

MORE THAN SKIN DEEP

THE BEAUTY TITAN TALKS ABOUT HIS FAVORITE FRAGRANCES, EXOTIC INGREDIENTS AND FLATULENT CABBIES.

ENTREPRENEUR LEV GLAZMAN, 53, IS THE CO-FOUNDER of Fresh, a beauty brand that originated in Boston. Born and raised in St. Petersburg, Russia, Glazman immigrated to Israel at the age of 10. After finishing his compulsory military service, he moved to the United States at 23, settling first in New York and then in Boston. With his partner, Alina Roytberg, he founded Fresh in the early '90s, starting with soaps and eventually expanding into a global skin care, fragrance and cosmetics brand.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What originally inspired you to go into beauty products?
LEV GLAZMAN: Well, ever since I was a little kid, I was always very sensitive to fragrances. Especially growing up in Soviet-era Russia, in the mid-'60s, because there was only one fragrance for men and one for women, called Red Moscow. It smelled like crap. My mother took me to a black-market place where they smuggled in French fragrances, and it was sort of like the first time I fell in love. The seed was planted. I connect emotionally to it, and I find beauty and fragrance very transformative. It's also very affordable, so anyone can do it.

Person you'd most like to see endorse Fresh? There are quite a few, but we're really not connected to the celebrity thing. I'd go more with someone whose lifestyle aligns closely with Fresh. The problem with endorsements or brand ambassadors is that I would need to connect with them personally. They'd need to capture my imagination. But if I had to name one person, I'd say someone like Anouk Aimée.

Scent you abhor? Garlic.

Personal favorite? I'm a huge fan of vetiver, but it's very polarizing because it's so animalistic.

Worst ingredient in most moisturizers? The industry is pretty careful, but I'm not a big fan of mineral oils because they clog the skin. Also, petroleum-based products, because they do nothing.

When you were doing QVC a lot, how much product did you move? I think my record was 7,000 bottles of fragrance in 12 minutes.

Whoa! Ingredient you avoid? Well, the thing I'm most turned off by is extractions from animal glands or testicles. I really don't see a need for it.

Most exotic ingredient in one of your products? I guess the noni fruit in my Black Tea Eye Concentrate. I love it. It gives you a lot of hydration, and the area around the eyes is so thin that it really needs it.

Where is your biggest customer base? We're very popular here, and we have a very loyal customer base, but Asia is becoming a huge market for us. Hong Kong and mainland China.

Your personal beauty secret? Great skin starts with clean skin, so cleanser is really important, as is exfoliating. Plenty of masks to detoxify. But most important is to drink lots of water and sleep at least seven hours each night. That, and don't eat a lot of sugar.

Product that you made that flopped? Our least successful one was geranium and pepper. People seemed to think it was too effervescent, or sharp and overpowering. But fragrances also go in cycles, so maybe our timing was off.

"Growing up in Soviet-era Russia ... there was only one fragrance for men and one for women.... It smelled like crap."

Most unusual scent you've created? I use cannabis in one with chocolate. It's one of our top fragrances and pretty unique to Fresh.

Most expensive ingredient? Probably jasmine. It's very, very costly, and it comes in varying grades. It goes from $2,000 per kilogram to $75,000 per kilogram.

Beauty thing that most people get wrong? Choosing the wrong cleanser. Using one that strips the skin of all essential nutrients. Cleanser has to be gentle and soap-free.

How much of selling beauty products relies on the packaging? Well, I'm a perfectionist, so I think everything is important, but I believe in aesthetics from beginning to end. Our products have always looked chic. The packaging has to appeal.

Is smell your most refined sense? One of them, but flavor is also very acute. I can be eating dessert and be inspired to create a fragrance. Taste is a huge and inseparable part of smell.

What's the most evocative smell from your childhood, like Proust and his madeleines? The smell of my grandfather. He used this incredible cologne. I have no idea what it was, but it was like Acqua di Parma. He was a superstar. Very Cary Grant.

Most overrated beauty products? Well, BB creams can be challenging. It's a new wave of creams that have hydration, tint and SPF, and I think they're trying to deliver too much in one product.

At the end of the day, are you selling hope in a jar? Not really, because I witness scientifically what it does to the skin. I see the improvement of our customers' skin. I see the transformation. The technology and science of skin care are so advanced these days, it really isn't selling hope in a jar.

Cosmetic surgery: yea or nay? Sure! Why not? Anyway to defy gravity and aging is OK with me.

What is the best way to apply a fragrance? There is a correct way. First of all, you want to make sure you have no other scents on, from body cream or soap or whatever. I like to apply it on the back of the neck, the clavicle and upper arms. But the habit of spraying your wrist and rubbing them together is wrong, because you're interrupting the way the fragrance is meant to unfold, rubbing off the top notes.

Cologne you can't stand? Without naming names, there are some that are done in a way that's just not well-balanced.

Do the air fresheners in taxi cabs and Ubers drive you crazy? Well, they're a must, especially with drivers farting. But a lot are just overpowering. It should be gentle and understated. We're talking about doing home fragrances in some form, so we'll see.

Single favorite smell? Bread baking. It's so warm and cozy.

Your definition of beauty? God, it's such a big word. It's the knowledge, the emotion and the passion a person projects. Self-awareness. Knowing how to embrace every stage of life. Knowing how to live in the moment. That's pretty much it. But great products always help to enhance it. ◆

ANYTHING BUT ROUTINE

AN HOUR-BY-HOUR LOOK AT THE LIVES OF SOME OF BOSTON'S HARDEST-WORKING FITNESS GURUS.

BY THE Improper Staff

PHOTOGRAPHED BY John Huet AT RED SKY STUDIOS

The gloves didn't fall far from the ring for George Foreman III. The son of the famous pro boxer and grillmaster has a sculpted physique and a booming year-old South Boston gym, The Club. Foreman walked us through a day in his regimented life (though he does allow himself some kickback time with the Crawley family).

5 AM: Wake up...and hit the snooze button.

5:15 AM: Take a shower and walk to The Club.

6 AM: Teach a BoxFIIT 360 class.

7 AM: Eat breakfast at Nourish Your Soul. I usually have a GoMacro Morning Harvest bar (packed with apples and walnuts) and Get Set green and apple cinnamon juices. An apple a day keeps the doctor away, and with these items it's like eating six apples. And Get Set is a great boost of greens and a few ingredients to get the blood flowing before a workout.

8 AM: Teach a BoxFIIT 360 class.

11:30 AM: Teach a BoxFIIT Strength Extreme class.

NOON: Grab a quick salad with chicken from Sweetgreen and hold office hours. I answer emails and write new workouts for my BoxFIIT classes and bag work. The general technique and profile of a workout is determined by whether it is a boxer, brawler or puncher's workout. By starting with the main goal of the boxing skills I'm teaching, I can then add strength and conditioning exercises that help develop the muscles and coordination needed to perform the skill.

1 PM: Film home-fitness videos for FIITClub.com for my members. On this particular day, we filmed four at the gym thanks to Rob Maloof of Gauntlet Studios in Fort Point. I love filming because it makes it possible to help thousands of people to get in shape.

4:30 PM: Take a shower and get dressed to teach even more classes.

5:10 PM: Teach a BoxFIIT Orientation class and two BoxFIIT 360 classes.

7:30 PM: Work out for 20 minutes with kettlebells and vintage dumbbells.

8 PM: Walk home. On my way, I grab two Sweetgreen salads for dinner because I LOVE fresh veggies—I'm like a cow. And the people who work there are so nice. I usually alternate between the portobello, squash and wild rice salad, the Avocobbo and the Harvest Bowl.

8:30 PM: Take a shower.

9 PM: Eat dinner and watch Downton Abbey. It helps me unwind because there are so many subplots and details to follow that I have no choice but to shut off my work brain in order to follow it. My favorite character is the grandmother—the Dowager Countess. She reminds me of my ex: full of class, comic relief, quick wit and the glue that keeps the family together.

11 PM: Go to bed. Exercise is the ONLY way I can fall asleep right away. Otherwise, I just stay up thinking about squats.

A lifelong dancer, Julia Robinson worked as a Patriots cheerleader before opening her Modern Barre fitness studio in Chestnut Hill a little more than a year ago. Here's how she stays on point, with six healthy meals and a lot of smooth moves.

5:15 AM: Wake, shower, light stretch.

5:30 AM: Meal 1: An 8-ounce glass of warm lemon water and two rice cakes with all-natural peanut butter and banana.

6 AM: Open studio.

6:15 AM: Teach Signature Modern Barre Express. I get everyone warmed up and spend the rest of the class demoing, offering modifications and correcting form and alignment.

7:15 AM: Take a three-mile run through the Boston College campus and up Comm. Ave. Running outside is something I have always done, and it's very meditative for me. I always stretch for 10 to 20 minutes after I run.

8:30 AM: Meal 2: Organic Greek yogurt with organic berries, unsweetened coconut flakes, walnuts, chia seeds and flaxseed, an organic ruby-red grapefruit, a glass of orange juice, a vitamin-D supplement and 1 teaspoon of organic elderberry syrup, an antioxidant and immune system support that's especially helpful on long days.

9:30 AM: Teach Signature Modern Barre class. Each exercise works muscles to fatigue and then stretches them to increase flexibility and create long, lean lines.

10:30 AM: Meal 3: Cashew Cookie Larabar, an organic Gala apple and a decaf misto with skim milk, one Sugar in the Raw and cinnamon.

11 AM: Check emails, follow up with new clients, finalize training materials for new instructors, confirm the schedule for the upcoming month, manage apparel and ordering and work on social media marketing.

1 PM: Meal 4: A can of tuna with a salad of butter lettuce, cucumber, carrots, cherry tomatoes, almonds and homemade honey-mustard dressing. Tuna is a quick and easy way to get a lot of protein, which helps me stay full for the afternoon.

1:30 PM: Hold meetings and plan classes.

4:30 PM: Meal 5: Homemade chicken-vegetable soup with brown rice and an Adora dark-chocolate calcium supplement. Usually I crave something sweet in the late afternoon, so this is a better option than a Snickers bar.

5 PM: Respond to emails.

6:30 PM: Teach Cardio Barre, a dance-inspired aerobic workout.

8:15 PM: Arrive home and shower.

8:30 PM: Meal 6: Roasted chicken and roasted root vegetables with quinoa, which provides an extra punch of protein.

9 PM: Do the dishes and plan meals and clothes for the next day.

10:30 PM: Lights out.

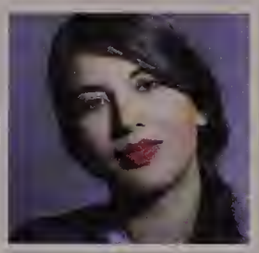
4:45 AM: Eat breakfast (Cheerios and black coffee), work on business emails and create workouts and playlists for today's classes and personal training clients.

5:45 AM: Open the studio and prepare for my first personal training client. BURN is only four blocks from my home in the South End, so it's a quick commute.

7 AM: Teach Power BURN, a boot camp class that incorporates pyramid interval sets that individually focus on your lower body, core and upper body. During this type of class, I perform the exercises but spend the majority of my time coaching. I BURNed 321 calories in 45 minutes.

8 AM: Walk my two dogs and then eat my morning snack (egg whites on whole wheat toast and a banana) while updating our website and social media.

11:45 AM: Return to BURN for a V-Flow yoga class taught by one of our coaches. If it isn't full, I often use this class for my own practice. (On Saturdays, I teach Broga, a yoga class designed specifically for men, but open to all, that combines core-strengthening, muscle-toning, cardio-working, stress-reducing, clarity-enhancing postures with functional fitness exercises.)



1:30 PM: Treat myself to a lunch at Cafe Madeleine: croque monsieur, cafe latte and double chocolate cookie. I love supporting other South End small businesses.

2:30 PM: Train my last clients of the day and prepare the studio for evening classes. In between, I find some time for my own strength-conditioning workout using kettle-bells and bodyweight exercises.

6:15 PM: Teach two more classes. During Bike BURN, I'm able to get a good cardio workout. For Tabata BURN, which utilizes high-intensity interval training (HIIT) to increase athletic performance and boost VO_2max and endurance, I spend the majority of my time coaching the class. I BURNed 1138 calories in 90 minutes.

8 PM: Eat dinner (grilled chicken breast with a Sriracha butter sauce, brown rice and string beans, plus fruit parfait for dessert). Then I relax on the couch while watching TV with my husband and two dogs before going to bed, usually around 11 pm.

In May, neuropathologist turned trainer Jonathan Cruz opened BURN Fitness Studios, a boutique fitness center offering a range of high-intensity interval training classes, from rowing to cycling and beyond. His first client shows up at 6 am—and his day only heats up from there.

Alexandra Fuller earned her MBA at Simmons, but she's put those business skills to work by founding a nonprofit. Launched in 2013, Level Ground Mixed Martial Arts provides athletic training, professional mentorship, academic support and employment to youth in Roxbury, Dorchester, Mattapan and Hyde Park—and keeps this Brazilian jiujitsu purple belt plenty busy.

8:30 AM: Wake up, enjoy breakfast—coffee with almond milk plus two pieces of toasted Ezekiel bread slathered with almond butter and blueberry preserves—and walk my dog.

9:15 AM: Reflect, read, journal and pray.

9:45 AM: Organize student uniforms (jiujitsu gis and belts) for tonight's training. Then I travel to meetings or work from home on special projects. Right now, that means our Indiegogo crowdfunding campaign, which will help scale up our 2015 youth programs.

11:45 AM: Head to Brazilian Top Team Boston in Everett to train. I aim for at least five sessions per week so I can serve as a better coach. Plus, some of my closest friends are my training partners.

2 PM: Pick up lunch on my way to Roxbury, where three of our four sites are located. I usually go for a chicken and vegetable sub and/or an acai bowl with honey, strawberries, banana and granola.

3:30 PM: Co-teach MMA to 20 kids with my head instructor, Hudson Henriques, at the Trotter School. The kiddos have lots of energy, so we do a fairly rigorous workout at the beginning so they're better able to focus. Then we split up for drills before regrouping to set goals and reflect on applying the values of Level Ground: discipline, respect, humility, tenacity and self-control.

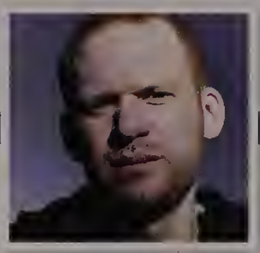
4:45 PM: Hit Ula Cafe in JP for a decaf coffee and another hour of work before heading to our evening site in Egleston Square.

6 PM: Touch base with students as they arrive for tutoring or a life-skills workshop; right now, I'm focusing on helping my high school seniors plan their next steps after graduation. They also help set up 36 heavy grappling mats and distribute uniforms.

7 PM: Co-teach Brazilian jiujitsu. The first hour is devoted to warming up, conditioning and drilling positions. The next hour is nonstop "rolling" (grappling). We try to push the students in a safe and structured way so they realize how much they are capable of. Then comes a 20-minute reflection to ensure our values transcend the mat.

9:20 PM: Check in with more students, roll or hold pads for them and continue to cultivate our relationships. Students are free to spar, hang out and have fun.

10 PM: Tear down the mats, load up the uniforms and drive students home.



12:15 AM: Shower and cook dinner, which usually consists of a lean protein, salad, cashews and cheese, followed by dark chocolate for dessert.

1:15 AM: Flex my creative muscles by writing poetry, sketching or working on my new blog.

2:15 AM: Sleep!

One of the four local founders of Back Bay's Vélo-City, which opened last year, Thomas Resor not only helps run the cycling studio but also teaches a couple of classes. The South Boston resident says he only needs 5 hours of sleep, which leaves 19 hours for him to squeeze in a lot of activity on a typical Tuesday.

5 AM: Wake up and check my Pocket MBTA app for the next bus. I'll listen to my playlist on the bus while I swipe through Tinder or check my Hinge matches for the day.

5:30 AM: Arrive at Vélo-City to run the check-in for the 6 am class. Help people with shoes and bike set-up. While that class is going on, I usually grab coffee and small snack.

7 AM: Teach the 7:10 am class on Tuesday and Thursdays.

8 AM: Clean up the studio after morning classes.

9 AM: Head down the street to Boston Tennis and Racquet Club to lift weights—only for about 30 minutes and strictly beach muscles—and shower. (We're adding showers to the studio soon, which will help!)

10 AM: Eat breakfast at the Pour House. They have amazing food and large portions and never charge me for the five cups of coffee I drink. I'm always trying to keep calories on because I'm teaching or taking six to 10 spin classes a week.

10:30 AM–4:30 PM: Maintain the studio three days a week. I'm usually making playlists, cleaning, checking bikes, responding to emails and updating the schedule. The other two days I'm either volunteering at a public school in JP or the Boys & Girls Club in Southie. Occasionally, I'll fire up the pink mustache and drive for Lyft.

2 PM: Eat a very light lunch because I'm usually still full from breakfast and I can't teach on a full stomach.

4:30 PM: Get ready for the evening classes. I teach the 5:30 pm class on Tuesdays and Fridays, so it's important to be ready to go by 5.

5:30–9 PM: Hang at the studio for our evening classes. We are always busy and have 40 bikes, so I love being there to help people get set up. Sometimes I grab dinner during the later classes. I generally avoid the nearby Sweetgreen because it's too healthy. I'm more of a dollar menu at Wendy's guy. I can't wait for the Shake Shack to open next door to us on Newbury Street and the Chipotle to open on Boylston Street. I've probably burned 1,000 calories, so it's nice eating what I want.

9:30 PM: Arrive home and take a shower.

10 PM–MIDNIGHT: Watch reality TV (Vanderpump Rules, The Challenge, Bachelor in Paradise). I try to get to bed before midnight, but it depends on how many shows are on my DVR.

BEAUTY QUEENED

BY SCOTT KEARNAN • PHOTOS BY NATASHA MOUSTACHE

WITH THE WINTER season premiere just weeks away, Boston performer Katya is ready to sashay down the runway of RuPaul's Drag Race.

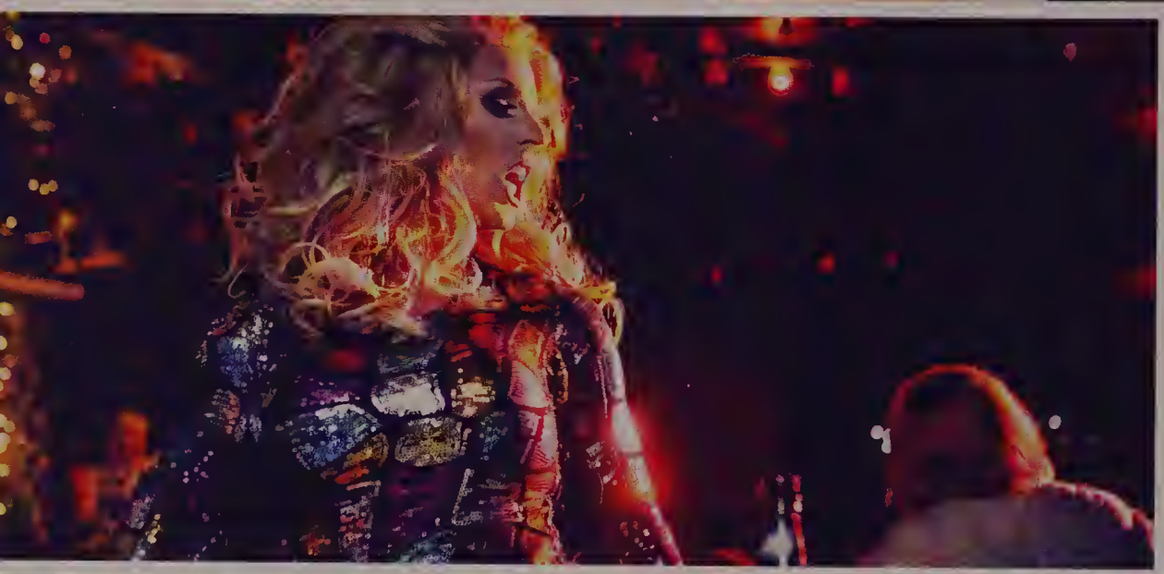
We hope someone brought a mop.

"I like ugly drag," says the soon-to-be reality-show star. The gender-fucking art form has its own taxonomy, and mainstream audiences are probably most familiar with the glittery genus of "pageant queens": big-haired, bedazzled purveyors of ultra-feminine "perfection." But Katya combines girly glamour with a more subversive personal style. "To me, the best vision of drag is this: Imagine a Miss America contestant. She comes out and everything about her is completely flawless. She walks down the runway, and as she turns to head back, you suddenly see that there's shit all down her dress. Or a big, bloody boil on the side of her head. But she never talks about it, and no one says a thing," says the performer, bringing a hush-hush finger to smirking lips.

All drag queens, on some level or another, challenge conventional notions of gender. But Brian McCook (Katya's alter ego, or vice versa) is also interested in sending up ridiculous beauty standards. He says his drag is more like an extension of clowning, and he finds special inspiration in female comedians who "are pretty, but unafraid to be ugly." Think Amy Sedaris, Sarah Silverman, Maria Bamford. Rather than striving to embody flawless femininity, McCook sees Katya as an opportunity to expose "the crumbling foundation of that perfect image which women have to project."

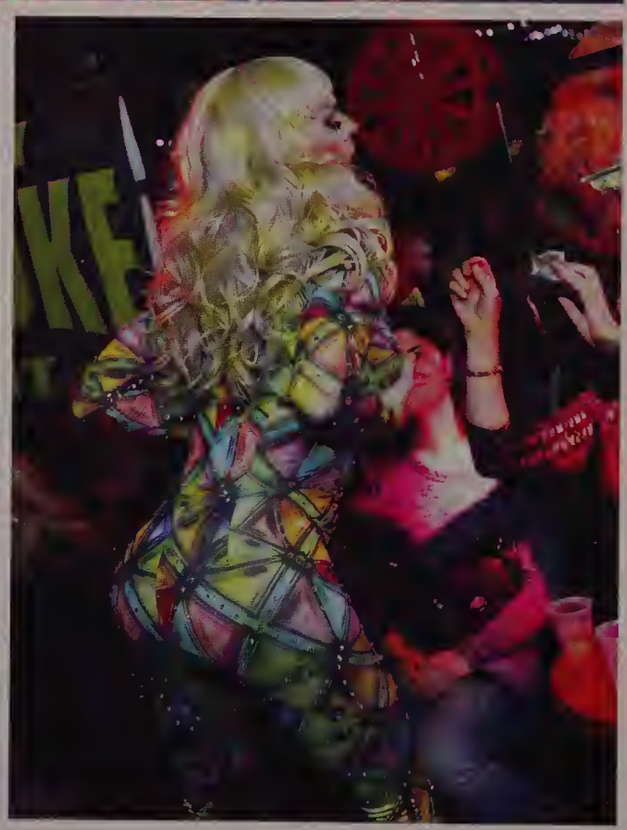
In the words of RuPaul: Can we get an amen up in here?

Of course, McCook can cut a fierce, fabulous figure when in character as Katya Zamolodchikova, a Russian femme fatale he developed in 2006 as a student at MassArt. McCook's piercing green eyes smolder under Katya's copious eye shadow, and his yoga-toned body—often poured like honey into vibrantly patterned leotards—is prone to performing impressive gymnastic feats on stage. (Picture a bodacious Bond villainess by way of the Big Apple Circus.) But Katya also cut her teeth with Trani-Wreck, a long-running night of avant-garde queer theater, and spent seven years hosting her own edgy, experimental show, Perestroika. So even in glamour-puss mode, McCook still tends to include what he calls "the wink"—burn makeup, perhaps, or nicotine-stained fake teeth—that reflects drag's irreverent roots.

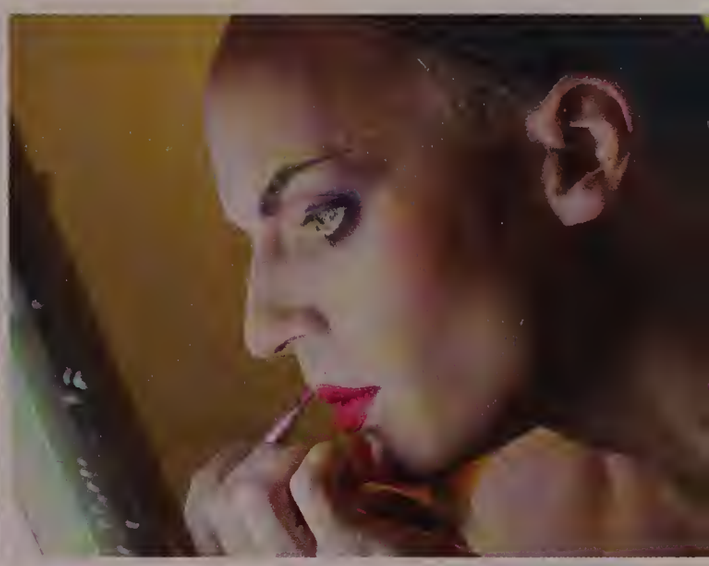


"If I were a woman, I would actually be nothing like my drag character.... I'd probably get dressed up twice a year," McCook admits, sitting in sweatpants and a T-shirt in his comfy, campy Bay Village apartment. Mannequin busts wearing bobbed wigs line a wall painted in the avocado green of kitschy 1970s rec rooms. The sofa is wrapped in a Playboy bunny-patterned fabric. In one corner, a clothing rack overflows with sparkly costumes homemade on the nearby sewing machine. Opposite, a bed sits under a hand-painted sign: "Welcome Home, Whore." And messily splayed across a dining counter is a department store's worth of cosmetics.

Showtime is at 7 pm downstairs at Jacques, the drag cabaret where he performs on Saturday nights.



So McCook stands before his illuminated makeup mirror to begin the two-hour transformation into Katya. He loves performing. The prettifying process, on the other hand, is more like a necessary evil.



"It has a lot to do with male privilege, being able to literally roll out of bed and go to Starbucks," McCook says. "You can smell bad, look like shit, and people don't think anything of it. But if a girl did that? 'Oh God! Gross!' "

"I really believe in what RuPaul says: We're born naked, and the rest is drag," he adds, picking up a big bottle of liquid foundation. "And I'm really grateful that boy drag is so much easier."

Maybe so, but it's hard-working showgirl Katya who's catapulted McCook into prime time. Entering its seventh season, RuPaul's Drag Race has grown from a low budget-looking experiment in niche programming to a pop-culture phenomenon with splashy promotional campaigns and live-broadcast season finales. It's the highest rated show on Logo, MTV's sibling network focused on LGBT-related programming, and gay bars across the country host weekly viewing parties. (Naturally, Jacques will follow suit.) And the popularity of the spirited show, which spawns the kind of hashtag-ready catchphrases and gifs of which live-tweet dreams are made, extends well beyond LGBT audiences. In 2014, the Television Critics Association crowned Drag Race with an award for Outstanding Achievement in Reality Programming, ahead of mainstream standbys like Survivor and The Voice.

More important for contestants, the show's search for "America's next drag superstar" has spawned bona fide—well, superstars. Standout alums wind up with dozens of international appearances each year, from Caribbean cruises to nightclub shows, earning thousands of dollars per booking. Winners become cottage industries.

Consider Sharon Needles, a goth-glam queen who now rivals Elvira as a camp Halloween icon, or Bianca Del Rio, an insult comic whose touring one-woman show, Rolodex of Hate, plays Boston's House of Blues this month.

Her season hasn't even started, but Katya is already booked for a show in Brazil.

"I'm excited and horrified" about the looming premiere, says Katya, the makeup now piling on. Past contestants, including Boston's Jujubee, a two-time Drag Race finalist, have offered advice, but it was still daunting to compete, especially as a 32-year-old vet surrounded by 20-somethings who "are better at makeup in two years than I am now," Katya says. "But they're post-Drag Race queens. YouTube is full of drag makeup tutorials now. That didn't exist when I started."

> "It's less like painting a face and more like staining a deck," Katya quips. "Drag queens have more in common with house painters than makeup artists."

Katya is self-taught, and it took years to get the makeup ritual right. First comes a layer of foundation: heavy-duty stuff applied thick enough to cover remnant stubble and survive sweaty back-to-back shows. "It's less like painting a face and more like staining a deck," Katya quips. "Drag queens have more in common with house painters than makeup artists." Next, a tinted contour cream traces her brow and jawline, swooping across cheekbones and slicing down the bridge of her already-pert nose. Then those sharp lines are buffed with a brush, creating shadows that soften the chiseled architecture underneath into something more feminine. "Changing the geography of the face" is the lion's share of the work, Katya says. Add luscious lips and come-hither eyes, and she's ready to serve face.

Next: Body. Katya slithers into four sets of dance tights to create an—ahem—more ladylike silhouette. Then she molds an hourglass figure by affixing foam pads, couch stuffing she carves like turkey with an electric knife, to the thighs and butt. She rolls up fishnet stockings and snaps on a rubber corset. She pulls on a body shaper cut like a one-piece bathing suit. She adds about 8 pounds in silicone breasts.

And now it's time to get dressed.

"It's so constricting," says Katya, finally dolled up in something slinky and sequined. She grabs a duffel bag of clothes—her night's costume changes—and races toward the door. "It's like a heavy-handed metaphor for the trials and tribulations of modern womanhood."

Once the lights go up on the Jacques stage, nothing about Katya seems "constricted." After a few touch-ups in a cramped, sauna-like dressing room shared with three other queens, she hits the stage with splits and backbends. She bumps and grinds to a thumping medley of Britney Spears hits, twirling offstage and teasing tables of hooting patrons. Mounting the bar, she pushes aside beer bottles to toss her blond mane like an '80s supermodel on the hood of a hot rod. Katya trades off with other queens for a 20-minute costume change, then returns to the beat of rapper Riskay's nasty caught-you-cheatin' anthem, "Smell Yo Dick." She grabs crumpled cash from the outstretched arms of the audience, writhing against slack-jawed viewers who find the spectacle equal parts funny, gross and sexy.

It's also exhausting. "Drag is really hard on your body," McCook says. In fact, before Drag Race came calling for his saucy character, he even considered putting his performance days behind him. It was hard to reconcile his work at a healthier lifestyle—better eating, no more drugs or drinking—with razor burn, pained foot arches and a body crammed under rib-jabbing corset boning. But his art won. Katya won. Drag Race fame will follow. And though his experiences on the show have smoothed out some of Katya's rougher edges with a bit more gloss, it is—cliche though it may be—McCook's attitude that makes both his personas shine.

"It's one thing if you love makeup and products. But if you don't, the beauty industry is economically oppressive," McCook says, adding a dash of eyeliner. "If you're a woman and you don't wear makeup to your job, it's not considered acceptable. That's oppressive! It's crazy. And that's why I think it is a formidable act of protest to say, 'No. I'm going to be aggressively plain!' "

"I fucking love that," he declares, glancing away from the mirror, eyes twinkling under the most luscious fake lashes. ◆

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

SMOOTH AS GLASS

As the longtime host of This American Life, Ira Glass has tackled diverse material, from a trip to the country's biggest party school to a look at life as a Muslim family in post-9/11 America. But he's taking on a totally new challenge with Three Acts, Two Dancers, One Radio Host, which brings radio stories to the stage through modern dance in a unique collaboration with Monica Bill Barnes & Company. Glass met Barnes when they were cast in a So You Think You Can Dance parody in New York; soon after, Glass invited Barnes & Co. to perform in a film version of TAL. That experience spawned Three Acts, which mixes mediums on Jan. 24 and 25 at the Citi Shubert Theatre. Check out our interview with Monica Bill Barnes at improper.com. / Alexandra Cavallo

ON HIS TERMS For a time, the legacy of late Iranian artist Bahman Mohassess was on track to live on only in history books. Paintings and sculptures not censored by his oppressive government were later destroyed by the artist himself as an act of protest. But decades later, the reclusive "Persian Picasso" has found a voice again in Fifi Howls from Happiness, a documentary that he agreed to before his 2010 death "so that no idiot will write my biography the way it suits them." Named for one of the few paintings he kept, it screens as part of the Museum of Fine Arts' Boston Festival of Films from Iran. See the artist uncensored on Jan. 23 and 24. Meghan Kavanaugh PHOTO: MUSIC BOX FILMS

Reviews by Brett Michel

Birdman or (The Unexpected Virtue of Ignorance) ★★★ There's a gimmick in this new tour de force from Alejandro Gonzalez Iñarritu, but it's not what you're thinking. Sure, Michael Keaton is terrifically ironic as Riggan Thomson—aka Birdman, a nod to his time as Batman more than two decades ago—a washed-up actor attempting a "serious" comeback on Broadway by writing, directing and starring in an ill-advised adaptation of Raymond Carver stories. No, it's the single-take illusion that Iñarritu and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki employ when it serves little dramatic purpose, especially given the amount of time compression (the movie is set during the course of about a week). Lubezki won an Oscar for the same trick in Alfonso Cuaron's Gravity, and initially it seems to fit the backstage feel, as if we're watching a play within a play—but moving outside the theater, the technique is a scream for attention. That's a shame, given the nice work by Edward Norton as the stage star who tries to overtake Riggan's production, an understated Zach Galifianakis as Riggan's friend and producer, and Emma Stone out-acting everyone as Riggan's assistant. She's also the possibly schizophrenic actor's recovering addict daughter, who falls for her father's nemesis. Yeah, the script's the weakest part. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Foxcatcher ★★½ In this true-crime drama, Steve Carell is nearly unrecognizable as billionaire John du Pont, outfitted with a prominent prosthetic nose, Channing Tatum also sports a fake proboscis, and cauliflower ears, as 1984 Olympic gold medal-winning wrestler Mark Schultz. The makeup is an unconvincing distraction, a miscalculation by Bennett Miller, the talented director of Capote, who'd resisted burying Philip Seymour Hoffman under latex. It's unfortunate, given the strong work of his leads. Carell is deliberately creepy and off-putting, adopting a lilting monotone that's as vacant as du Pont's eyes. Tatum seethes with silent rage in the shadow of his older, more successful Olympian brother Dave (a bearded Mark Ruffalo), a family man and gym owner who's happy to hear that du Pont is making the underemployed Mark a coach at du Pont's Foxcatcher Farm, a massive estate in suburban Philadelphia. But du Pont eventually becomes disappointed in Mark and offers Dave a coaching position, setting the stage for tragedy. The film is set during the buildup to the 1988 Olympics, but the shooting that's shoehorned into the final 10 minutes didn't actually transpire until 1996, making the supposition of what may have fueled the climactic crime feel as false as the nose on Carell's face. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies ★★ Academy Award-winning filmmaker Peter Jackson is milking Middle Earth for all it's worth, concluding his second trilogy spawned from the pages of J.R.R. Tolkien's fantasy classics in bloated fashion, pushing a slim children's book well past the breaking point with a third movie that lasts 2 hours and 24 minutes. There's no danger of this final trek winning the Oscars that his final installment of the Lord of the Rings trilogy took home to New Zealand, which still serves as this film's stomping, hacking and slashing grounds. But there's hardly any Hobbit in it, with Bilbo Baggins (Martin Freeman) either relegated to the sidelines or knocked out cold as Thorin Oakenshield (Richard Armitage) goes mad with "Dragon Sickness" and Gandalf (Ian McKellen) rallies the dwarves—whose names I still can't remember after three films—to engage in video-game action captured in harshly lit HD that makes the movie look like a syndicated TV show from the '90s. Even those had their charms, though—and there's precious little here. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games: Mockingjay - Part 1 ★★ With barely enough material to pad out 45 minutes, let alone more than two hours, this filmed version of about 40 percent of Suzanne Collins' young adult novel is one of the worst cash grabs I've ever seen. Director Francis Lawrence greatly elevated the second installment of this serialized movie series after Gary Ross' languid adaptation of the original, but he can't do much with a film that's all set-up for next year's conclusion. And Oscar winner Jennifer Lawrence continues to impress as the ridiculously named Katniss Everdeen, but she's given little to do but mope in an underground bunker, venturing out only a few times. Once is to shoot a deer—before deciding not to—and then a couple of times it's to shoot...public service announcements. They're meant to help rally the rebellion against President Snow (Donald Sutherland) and the Capitol, where a climactic mission is being mounted (much of it off-screen, unfortunately) to rescue one-third of Katniss' love triangle, Peeta Mellark (Josh Hutcherson). The film is dedicated to Philip Seymour Hoffman, who died before completing his role as Plutarch Heavensbee. OK, all of these names are ridiculous. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Imitation Game ★★★ Director Morten Tyldum spends so much time setting up complex puzzles that he oversimplifies the life of his central enigma: Alan Turing, a British genius posthumously regarded as a father of the modern computer. Fortunately, Benedict Cumberbatch expertly plays the tortured intellect, who was enlisted to join "half a dozen crossword enthusiasts in a small village in the south of London" racing to crack the supposedly unbreakable Nazi codes of Germany's Enigma machine during World War II. It's Turing's hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle constructed by screenwriter Graham Moore, working from a biography that revealed more about the real Turing, including how he was fascinated by the scene in Snow

White and the Seven Dwarfs where the evil queen dips an apple into poison. Turing was sentenced for indecency in '52, and onscreen text informs us of his tragic suicide at the age of 41, a year after beginning government-mandated "chemical castration." It's a very conventional ending to a film about a complex, puzzling life. What we don't see is that Turing died of cyanide poisoning—a half-eaten apple beside him, foam coating his mouth, no prince to save him. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Inherent Vice ★★★★ The first adaptation of a Thomas Pynchon novel, director Paul Thomas Anderson's latest opens on a shot of Gordita Beach in 1970. The location is fictional, but the time period isn't: Anderson and cinematographer Robert Elswit have managed to recreate Los Angeles, gloriously captured on 35mm film as though they shot it in 1970. The ocean is viewed from a bungalow belonging to Larry "Doc" Sportello (Joaquin Phoenix), a lovelorn private dick and "dirty, filthy hippy" who mumbles his way through cases not unlike Elliot Gould's Philip Marlowe did in Robert Altman's The Long Goodbye. Doc is introduced to us by the mysterious Sortilège (singer Joanna Newsom), who appears bathed in sunlight and narrates the film, guiding us toward our first view of Shasta Fay Hepworth (Katherine Waterston), Anderson's version of a femme fatale. Jonny Greenwood's music lends a somber tone, a mood Anderson sustains throughout the meandering mystery—when he isn't making you laugh with absurdist delight. Josh Brolin is a standout as buzz-cut Christian "Bigfoot" Bjornsen, a lieutenant detective who spends his days enacting "civil rights violations." I remain blissfully unaware as to whether most of Sortilège's appearances occur anywhere other than in Doc's drug-addled mind; her tendency to disappear mid-conversation from the passenger seat of Doc's moving vehicle might leave literal-minded viewers thinking the movie more Incoherent Vice than the scruffy masterpiece it is. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Interstellar ★★ Christopher Nolan's latest film is set in an unspecified near-future where climate change has taken hold and man's ambition for science and exploration is a mostly forgotten dream. Matthew McConaughey's Cooper was once a Chuck Yeager-like test pilot for the remnants of NASA; now he's a farmer. In fact, everyone seems to be a farmer, fruitlessly trying to coax crops from the endless supply of dirt that keeps raining from the sky—but Nolan isn't content to keep the corn relegated to the fields. McConaughey's a terrific actor, and while a secret mission to save humanity will rocket him to the furthest reaches of another galaxy and even into—cue the Twilight Zone music—a fifth dimension, Nolan has marooned him with a script that contains very Earth-bound bromides about how love is the key...to everything. As an ill-advised subplot develops in the second act, we discover the threat to Cooper and the human race has less to do with the secrets of the universe than with man's nature—which is literally embodied by a character named "Mann," in case you didn't get it. Some space is best left unexplored. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Interview ★★1/2 An underling of Kim Jong-un (Randall Park) explains to his Supreme Leader, "He was a honeydick, sir," telling him that tabloid TV host Dave Skylark (James Franco) "deliberately appealed to the emotional, less rational aspects of your nature and seduced you into advancing his personal agenda." And what is the agenda of this notorious film from co-writers and co-directors Evan Goldberg and Seth Rogen, who also co-stars as Skylark's producer, Aaron Rapoport? To tell as many dick jokes—honeyed or otherwise—as possible in a comedy that pissed off a lot of people (and North Korea) before its release. For the record, this picture—about a couple of idiots who land a career-making interview with the dictator, only to be recruited by the CIA to assassinate the daddy's boy—is funny, at least until it turns into a bloody action movie. Still, I expected more from the guys who hilariously unleashed the Rapture in This Is the End, keeping the funny coming even as heads got ripped from sockets. This could have been remembered as the movie where Eminem outs himself as gay (of course!). Instead, it's a footnote for a new world of digital terror. (At Somerville and Apple Cinemas.)

Into the Woods ★★1/2 Rob Marshall returns to the movie musical after five years, and although this adaptation of Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine's 1986 stage production avoids becoming the debacle that was Nine, he's still blocking the action as poorly as he did more than a decade ago with Chicago. But then, that film won six Oscars, including Best Picture, so someone likes what he's doing. And frankly, his latest is well-cast, with Meryl Streep headlining as the Witch and Johnny Depp as the Wolf in this mélange of Brothers Grimm fairy tales built around the characters of a baker (James Corden) and his barren wife (Emily Blunt). Streep's blue-haired sorceress bursts into their shop, offering to grant the couple a baby, if only they'll retrieve items belonging to Cinderella (Anna Kendrick), Little Red Riding Hood (Lilla Crawford), Rapunzel (Mackenzie Mauzy) and Jack (Daniel Huttlestone), he of the Beanstalk. Most of the dialogue is sung; if that isn't your thing, you'll be missing Chris Pine's dazzlingly hammy turn as Prince Charming, where he unleashes his inner Shatner in a way barely glimpsed in his Captain Kirk role during two Star Trek pictures. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

A Most Violent Year ★★★1/2 It's difficult to watch writer/director J.C. Chandor's third impressive movie (after Margin Call and All Is Lost) without recalling The Godfather, although the violence isn't as overt as it was in Francis Ford Coppola's films, despite the threat established with Chandor's choice of title. A Most Violent Year also takes place in and around New York, but it's set during a different era than Coppola's mob masterpieces. Specifically, the winter of 1981—one of the city's most crime-ridden years. Oscar Isaac plays Abel Morales, an upwardly mobile immigrant who's trying to build a good life for his wife, Anna (Jessica Chastain), and their daughters by running a legitimate heating oil company in a corrupt industry. Chandor spends as much time focusing on the Morales' marriage as he does on Abel's troubled business dealings. Anna's father was a small-time hood, and as much as she's pressuring her biblically named husband to become a big-time one, he holds to his metaphorical guns—even as she resorts to packing a real one, creating more tension in a film rife with it. Isaac and Chastain are superb, as is Albert Brooks as Abel's lawyer. This is not to be missed. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Selma ★★★ Ava DuVernay's film shares much in common with Steven Spielberg's Lincoln; both focus on the back-room political deals and maneuvering of their protagonists, as well as on these men's rallying public personas. But there's a very good reason why her movie isn't called King: It's a historical chronicle about a movement, set during a riotous three-month period in 1965, when the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. led a peaceful campaign against violent opposition that culminated in an epic march in Alabama from Selma to Montgomery and coincided with President Lyndon B. Johnson's signing of the Voting Rights Act. DuVernay's intimate dramatization of the civil rights movement is enlivened by the remarkable central performance of David Oyelowo as King. The British actor brings the same humanity and frustration to his role that Daniel Day-Lewis brought to the embattled president in Lincoln, with just as much humor. Shame that fellow Brits Tom Wilkinson (as Johnson) and Tim Roth (as George Wallace) feel so utterly out of place in their roles. Nevertheless, DuVernay's achievement is a reminder of the road we still need to travel. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Theory of Everything ★★★1/2 There's more to Stephen Hawking than the 80-minute look you may have glimpsed during A Brief History of Time, Errol Morris' extraordinary 1991 nonfiction film about the life and work of the renowned theoretical physicist. Here, director James Marsh views Hawking from the perspective of his first wife, Jane, adapting her memoir into a touching biography. As Jane, Felicity Jones displays tremendous chemistry with the superb Eddie Redmayne, who does almost as much with limited mobility as Daniel Day-Lewis in his Oscar-winning turn in My Left Foot. When we first see him as a 21-year-old Cambridge student, Redmayne's Hawking shows subtle hints of his not-yet-diagnosed motor neuron disease, but when his legs eventually buckle beneath him, his head hitting the pavement with a sickening crack, the only one to disregard his doctor's assertion that he has two years to live is Jane, then a medieval studies major and a devout member of the Church of England. Stephen lacks faith in "celestial dictators," but the two navigate their different belief systems together for a quarter of a century—a love story that defines them and defies time more than just briefly. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Top Five ★★★ Chris Rock writes and directs this scabrously funny follow-up to his 2007 directing debut, I Think I Love My Wife—a reworking of Eric Rohmer's Chloe in the Afternoon—delivering a star-studded, episodic riff on Federico Fellini's La Dolce Vita and Woody Allen's Stardust Memories. The man has taste. He also has comic chops. While Rock's work behind the camera is serviceable, it's his work in front of it that gives the movie its funky rhythm. He plays comedian turned film star Andre Allen, a man who's grown tired of making people laugh—or maybe he's just afraid that he's ceased being funny since going on the wagon. Either way, Rock's plenty funny playing him, especially once he goes on the defensive during an interview with Chelsea Brown (Rosario Dawson), a journalist for The New York Times, a paper that's given his films nothing but bad reviews. There's also a Cinderella story mixed in, which isn't to say this is a fairy tale—not with foul-mouthed talents like Kevin Hart, Tracy Morgan, Cedric the Entertainer, J.B. Smoove and rapper DMX filling out the cast. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wild ★★★ Director Jean-Marc Vallée follows up last year's Dallas Buyers Club with this chronicle of a lost soul's 1,100-mile trek toward redemption and renewal, adapted from Cheryl Strayed's memoir by novelist Nick Hornby, who makes her journey as internal as it is outdoorsy. Reese Witherspoon plays Strayed as a woman in way over her head as she sets off alone on the Pacific Crest Trail with way too much gear, little of it practical. When first we see her, Strayed's well into her hike, tearing off a toenail bloodied from boots that are too small. But the real suffering came before. We flash back through various episodes of her life, from dealing with an abusive father in her troubled childhood (where she's played by Bobbi Strayed Lindstrom, the real Strayed's daughter) to the better upbringing she escaped to with her mother, Bobbi (a terrific Laura Dern), before things became worse again. This isn't the America's Sweetheart persona you expect from Witherspoon. Whoring herself out for heroin in flashback and frantically licking dew off of her tent to survive in the wild, she gives one of her most stripped-down performances to date. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

STAYING POWER All good things must come to an end, and no one knows this more than Sam Smith, who mines beauty from heartbreak with stirring tracks like his hit single "Stay with Me." But it's also just the beginning for the British sensation hailed as the male answer to Adele. The 22-year-old got his start collaborating with artists like Disclosure and Naughty Boy before dropping his May debut, In the Lonely Hour, the only album in 2014 to sell more than a million copies on both sides of the Atlantic. Smith could add to his critical acclaim next month, when he's up for six Grammy Awards, including Best New Artist. MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

NEGATIVE SPACE

Pessimists, pay a visit to Newtonville to marvel at The Power of Negative Thinking, in which seven artists posit that those in rose-colored glasses can only see so far. Question Randy Stevens' taste (and perhaps your own) with her deliberately garish pet portrait, Only $9,999, or take on Anthony Montuori's video games, designed to be impossible to win. If that doesn't discourage you, check out Bradley Tsalyuk and Corey Dunlap's banner, held aloft by smiley-face balloons but emblazoned with a decidedly demotivational slogan. The glass is half empty at the New Art Center through Feb. 21. / Sarah Hagman

THE WRITE STUFF

As influential as his work has been, we don't assoeiate Thoreau with the wow faetor of someone like, say, Houdini. (Maybe Walden Pond should have hosted a few underwater eseapes.) Yet as author Peter Turchi sees it, writers wield plenty of magie of their own. In his latest book, A Muse and a Maze: Writing as Puzzle, Mystery, and Magic, Turchi explores the eommon ground shared by magieians and writers, highlighting parallels between puzzle-making and the ereative process and offering lots of historical tidbits along the way. (It turns out Ben Franklin would have been a big fan of sudoku.) Wateh the magie happen when Turehi appears at Porter Square Books on Jan. 14. / Meghan Kavanaugh

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spiritcd nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. A WORD TO THE WISE

W. C. Fields was right when he said, "Never work with children or animals."

The Home for Little Wanderers' annual Gingerbread House Decorating Competition, which was held at Legacy Place, raised money for the Big Wishes Gift Drive by pairing the philanthropic families who sponsored the event with top chefs like Jasper White and Evan Deluty and media personalities such as blond bombshell Bianca de la Garza, Red Sox scribe Peter Gammons and yours truly. Radio heartthrob Chris Shine was the emcee, and the judges included Celtics mascot Lucky the Leprechaun (because apparently the ability to do endless backflips qualifies one to judge this sort of thing).

Many fantastically beautiful and fanciful creations resulted, although there were definite inequities, like the fact that I was working not with a professional chef, but with a 4-year-old who was more interested in eating candy than putting it on the gingerbread house.

Lesson learned. Next year, I'm hiring an architect, kidnapping a pastry chef and making sure that James Gordon has his own stash so he doesn't devour our building supplies. Other lesson learned: Jokes about diabetes are generally in poor taste, but nowhere more so than at events like this.

PLONK DE PLONK

Forget turkey and mistletoe. Good South African wines are infinitely better for making the season bright.

The African Presidential Center's annual holiday gathering, hosted at its townhouse on BU's campus by former ambassador to Tanzania Charles Stith, attracted a select group that included reformed academic and high-powered health care executive Deborah Prothrow-Stith, gorgeous skin care entrepreneur Charla Jones, dance impresario Anthony Williams and one woman who said, "I know nothing about wine, except that I like it," to which her friend replied, "Are you kidding? I'll drink Manischewitz if that's what they put in front of me."

KILL DA WABBIT!

It might come as a surprise to some scholars of Norse mythology, but it seems that Valhalla is located inside Jordan Hall at New England Conservatory.

An Evening in Valhalla began with a cocktail reception where one could rub elbows with the likes of co-chairs Wendy Shattuck, Muffy Glauber and David Scudder, New York socialite Jane Scovell, the scintillating Enid Beal, broadcasting giant Ron Della Chiesa and the delightful Joyce, Boston's answer to Martha Stewart, Holly Safford, music lover Jeffrey Marshall, Beacon Hillions Suki and Miguel de Braganca, opera patrons Steve and Jane Akin, Wagnerian extraordinaire Dalia Geffen and one woman who accidentally sent a chunk of foie gras flying across the floor and scrambled to retrieve it before anyone could slip on it.

A performance of Act III from Die Walküre—conducted by Robert Spano and featuring soprano Jane Eaglen and bass-baritone Greer Grimsley—earned a well-deserved standing ovation and was followed by an elegant dinner.

Lest it all sound terribly highbrow, know that there was one guest who critiqued the concert thusly: "It was lovely. I just happen to like the Bugs Bunny version better."

JUST THE TIP

How do you make a Bostonian feel better about dropping a bundle at Burberry? Make the evening a fundraiser for a charity as worthwhile as the Berkshire Hills Music Academy, which is precisely what Wellesley party pair Ashley and Paul Bernon did.

The school, which was founded by Bernon's parents, Peter and Kay, offers music education to students with intellectual disabilities, so there was a chorus to regale the crowd with Christmas carols while a slew of snacky waiters passed snacks and trays of Champagne. Present and accounted for: brunette beauty Penny Fireman (looking very Lara Croft), hot ginge Adam Weiner and his equally hot wife, Rita, the naturally carbonated Betty Ann Blum, statuesque socialite Amber D'Amelio, the dapper Michael Winter and his state treasurer wife, Deb Goldberg, bespectacled hipster Sam Slater with his stunning other half, Jessica, and so on and so forth.

The evening's most curious conversation: One guest introduced a friend to the doctor who performed his son's circumcision, and the friend said, "I have to admit—I think it's a barbaric practice," to which the doctor responded, "Well, there's a foreskin reclamation movement. Men attach weights to try and stretch the skin back."

To which the first man said, "If you're going to go to all that trouble, why not try to make the whole thing bigger?" ◆

MEN OF THE HOUR

THIS MAY BE THE MAN ISSUE, BUT THAT doesn't mean it's the machismo issue. (Not that we're entirely immune to certain lures of the #lumbersexual movement.) We think of it more as an opportunity simply to give some well-deserved extra attention to men doing interesting things—like, say, a former American Ninja Warrior contender who's teaching pint-sized parkour enthusiasts. Or perhaps a pastry pro who's putting sweet twists on familiar gameday snacks, just in time for the Pats' trip to the Super Bowl. How about a treasure hunter who turns salvaged finds into killer decor, or maybe an artist who creates beautiful paintings with a little help from some houseflies? Then there's our cover subject, who's been a doctor, an R&D expert, an FBI agent and a lawyer (twice)—at least on screen. And we even chat with the man who plays the Most Interesting Man in the World, who, it turns out, is pretty interesting himself. I'm short a Y chromosome, but I've very much enjoyed getting to know them. Hope you do too.

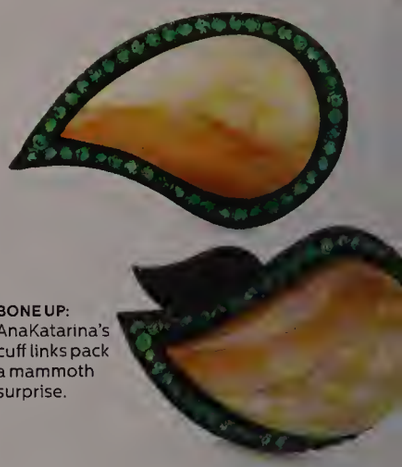
MEET SOME DEDICATED SKI BUMS PUTTING A NEW SPIN ON SLOPE STYLE »»

PEAK PRODUCTION: The Parlor team builds five to 10 custom pairs a week, and two new styles are in the works for next year.

SKI MOGULS



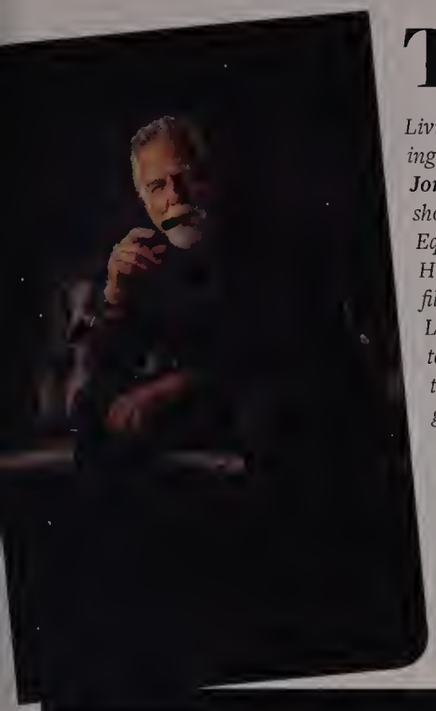
Rossignols and Salomons still dominate the slopes this winter, but a small custom shop in East Boston is gaining speed. "The buzz is definitely going," says Pete Endres, one of Parlor Custom Skis' three co-founders, who started the business in the unlikeliest of locales: a Cambridge funeral parlor's basement.

Endres, Mark Wallace and Jason Epstein started selling their handcrafted skis during the 2013 season. They've since hired production manager Tyler Grees and moved to a two-room Eastie workshop that houses all manufacturing, two shop dogs and a fridge full of Narragansett—the official beer sponsor for buddies who've skied together since their racing team days at Williams College. Now it's part of their 9-to-5. "My Monday was spent skiing 3 inches of fresh powder at Okemo," Wallace says. "It's like, this is why I started the company."

Piste perks aside, the founders say they opened shop to bolster a boutique market that skiers out west have known for years—and prove that custom isn't reserved for double black diamond regulars. "In a lot of ways, our custom skis can benefit the intermediate or advanced intermediate skier even more, because an advanced skier can ski almost anything," Endres says.

For $950, customers choose one of five base models, such as the Cardinal for all-mountain skiing, or the Heron for powder. After testing a standard pair up north, skiers report back on performance, and a new pair is made from scratch. But in addition to building skis, the crew is trying to build the ski community, hosting weekly dry land workouts on Boston Common during warm-weather months as well as shop nights every other Wednesday—mark your calendars for upcoming events on Feb. 4 and 18—so enthusiasts can peek behind the curtain and swap ski stories over beer. "When we get people here and show them what we do," Endres says, "there's no substitute for that." / Meghan Kavanaugh

BONE UP: AnaKatarina's cuff links pack a mammoth surprise.



OFF THE CUFF

"My work has a subtle aggression," says Ana-Katarina Vinkler-Petrovic, the local designer behind the AnaKatarina line of sustainable jewelry. Case in point: her new cuff links crafted from petrified mammoth and walrus tusks. How'd she come to create accessories fit for a stylish cave man? It all started on Christmas a few years back, when her kids' gift of a book called The World of Rings left her wondering aloud about ethical alternatives to ivory during the holiday meal. Her own mom quickly chimed in. "She said, 'Well, how about you use cow bone?'" the designer recalls. "I never thought of this before. I said, 'What kind of bone would one use?'" Her mother answered matter-of-factly: "Well, the shin bone of course."

After a Whole Foods trip, Vinkler-Petrovic got to work. "I started by using the bones that we give to dogs. I boiled them, got the fat out of them and started carving those." Later, she began experimenting with sustainably sourced camel bone and mammoth and walrus tusks, pairing them with conflict-free gems and recycled gold in her jewelry. But she only recently started designing for men, debuting her first cuff links at Dubai's fashion week in the fall. Now she's at work on a second cuff link series, slated to launch in February. "They're more influenced by midcentury modern design and the use of positive and negative space," she explains. But that's not all the designer has up her sleeve—she's looking into a material even more macho than mammoth. "Right now we're sourcing petrified walrus penal bone!" she says with a laugh. "I thought that was kind of fun for cuff links." / Jacqueline Houton

THE MAN'S MAN

Living up to the title of "The Most Interesting Man in the World" comes naturally to Jonathan Goldsmith*, a BU alum who just shot his ninth year of commercials for Dos Equis (look for new spots airing in March). His other credits include appearances in films opposite Clint Eastwood and Burt Lancaster, not to mention more than 350 television shows, and he uses his fame to support charitable causes from hunger relief to land mine removal. We gave him a call at his Vermont home to find out what it's like to play a man he says "everyone wants to emulate... including me."* / Meghan Kavanaugh

ON THE AUDITION: There were about 500 people that all looked like they were there for Juan Valdez.... They were all mostly Latinos, and I thought that was the direction they were heading. I thought I didn't have a chance....Then they started looking around all over America and Mexico and Buenos Aires, and they didn't find what they wanted....They ended up with a guy from New York playing this character.

ON HIS FAVORITE LINE: I think it might be, "He once fooled a psychic."...The guys that write this stuff are geniuses.

ON MEMORABLE FAN ENCOUNTERS: One fellow followed me into a men's room and insisted that I sign something. And I told him if he wouldn't mind waiting a little while, I'd be glad to.

ON HOW TO BE AN INTERESTING MAN: To do that you have to be interested in things, particularly in reading. With all of these instant-access-to-information vehicles that we have, people don't read anymore. And I think, consequently, you diminish your potential, your possibilities, your vocabulary and your ability to express yourself.... And I say get engaged—find something that is challenging to you, find a way that you can make a contribution.

ON HIS DAYS AT BU: I loved Copley Square. I loved the whole city, I really did....I remember Emerson—the Emerson women were very special....I have the utmost respect for the spirit of Boston....Tell 'em all to keep drinking.

Strap On

When we stumbled across a Kickstarter for a product called Rousers early this December, we weren't sure if we were amused, turned on or...confused. Branded as "overalls for the modern urban man," Rousers are just that: utilitarian overalls in various monochrome shades, modeled by a host of chiseled dudes going about their modern urban lives—catching a train, playing football, strolling in the park or grabbing a drink at the bar. The brainchild of Matt Jorgensen and Ben Waller, two friends who began playing around with designs for Rousers in their Boston apartment early last year, Rousers' Kickstarter page raised $30,912 of their $25,000 goal. So, it seems these guys might be onto something. Now available for pre-order for $99 (a deal when you consider all the extra pocket space!), the overalls started production this month. To herald the year of men in suspendered trousers (you saw it here first), we did a little digging to recall some famous gentlemen* who rocked the 'alls way back when. / Alexandra Cavallo

SUPER MARIO BROS.: Mario and Luigi were two bros who understood that, when it came to saving princesses and battling Bowser, functionality is just as important as fashion.

THE DAD IN GRANT WOOD'S AMERICAN GOTHIC: The original gentleman farmer! Is that a pitchfork in your hand, or are you just happy to see us?

NSYNC: Long before he was hanging with Jay Z and making an honest woman out of Jessica Biel, Justin Timberlake was hanging with his boy band homies... in light-wash overalls, immortalized for eternity in the pages of teen magazines and Google image searches. Never forget.

BACKSTREET BOYS: Well, A.J. specifically—with nothing but a wifebeater and a smile. And a furry white Kangol hat. Try to forget.

MARKY MARK: One strap, a gazillion muscles.

HEARTY BOYS

This is the season when we all start searching for big-boy red wines to go with the braised meats and hearty stews we're eating. The wines that will sustain us till spring feature bold spicy flavors, a full body, strong tannins and deep colors. The following three blind tasting champs are just the ticket. / Sandy Block

Sandy Block is o master of wine ond the vice president of beveroge operations for Legol Sea Foods.

PASANAU CEPS NOUS, PRIORAT, 2011 We can't leave Spain out of a discussion of big stunning reds, and no region hits the heights more consistently than Catalonia's mountainous Priorat zone. Grown on vines planted on rocky black slate soils, Ceps Nous is garnacha-based with a dash of syrah. It's got a spectacular combination of mocha, toasted almond and raspberry flavors. Liqueur-like and rich, this is a brilliant and memorable wine that will age for five years if you can resist the temptation to drink it now. $27, Martignetti Liquors, Boston

TASCA D'ALMERITA LAMÙRI NERO D'AVOLA, SICILY, 2012 Sicily is sizzling hot, and nero is the island's hero. No one does a better job with this emerging grape variety than the historic Tasca family estate. Aged in oak for a year, the wine has a smoky, baked-cherry and chocolate flavor. The name "lamùri" means "love" in Sicilian, and you might just find yourself swooning once you experience its lush, velvety charms. $20, Bacco's Wine & Cheese, Boston

MITOLO JESTER SHIRAZ, MCLAREN VALE, 2012 Crazes come and go in the world of wine, and right now Australia is being ostracized for its recent outsized popularity. I have little doubt, however, that the country will soon come roaring back in favor if it keeps producing outstanding wines such as this shiraz. Leathery, raisiny, deep and extracted with coffee and juicy plum flavors, this is a silky, versatile and layered red that will easily complement sausages, grilled vegetables, risotto dishes or a zuppa di pesce. $22, Brookline Liquor Mart

The new look for the beloved Mike & Patty's extends beyond the completely remodeled interior of the Bay Village breakfast and lunch shop. Owners Mike Gurevich and Ania Zaroda, along with chef Jesse Rosen, also made over the menu, introducing new sandwiches. Among the most popular is the Goldmine, a "ham and cheese" in the least traditional sense: griddled pancetta and ricotta whipped with honey, plus an over-easy egg with a fiery orange yolk, sandwiched between slices of toasted Iggy's brioche. / Elizabeth Bomze

COOKIE DOUGH DIP

1/2 cup unsalted butter
1/3 cup light brown sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
8 ounces cream cheese
1/2 cup powdered sugar
1/4 cup semi-sweet chocolate chips, pulsed in a food processor
1/4 cup semi-sweet chocolate chips, whole
Optional: You can add candy-coated pieces, nuts, raisins—or whatever you want. Go nuts!

In a small saucepan, melt the butter over medium heat. Add the brown sugar and stir until it dissolves. Remove from heat and mix in the vanilla. Set aside and let it cool completely.

With an electric mixer, combine the cream cheese and powdered sugar on medium speed for about 5 minutes until the mixture is light and fluffy.

Add the cooled butter-brown sugar mixture. Start on low and gradually increase speed to medium for about 1 minute until the mixture is fully incorporated and the color of cookie dough. Add the pulsed and whole chocolate chips (and any additions) and mix.

Refrigerate for at least 30 minutes. Remove the dip from the refrigerator and let it soften for 15 minutes. Transfer it to a serving bowl. Top it with sprinkles and serve with pretzels, fruit, graham crackers or potato chips. The dip can be stored in the refrigerator for up to 4 days.

FLY GUY

As one of 14 talents featured in the new MassArt exhibit Color Fields, John Knuth has made a series of paintings with some unusual collaborators: houseflies. The L.A. artist feeds the flies watercolor paint, which they transfer via flyspeck to his canvases. We asked Knuth about his unlikely co-workers and the colorful show, on view through March 7. / Alexandra Cavallo

HOW DID YOU COME UP WITH THIS IDEA? I initially started using the flies in the buildup to the second Iraq war. There was all this talk about biological warfare, and I'd been reading about flies and how they spread disease. And I was interested in making my own little biological warfare air force. There's this parlor trick where you tie a little paper airplane to a horsefly ... so I was cutting little paper airplanes out of cigarette paper and tying them to flies and letting them fly around the room. And I started seeing how they were actually spreading their biological contents. So it started as a way of using flyspeck to transfer different materials.

IS IT ABOUT CREATING BEAUTY FROM SOMETHING PEOPLE DESPISE? Yes, to me it became about transcendence of materials, using something very base to make something beautiful. And I also like them as a metaphor for the megalopolis. The compositions are like a million specks on a plane. For me, that's like flying over the San Gabriel Mountains and the L.A. Basin, and you see L.A. infinitely sprawled out forever.

DO YOU HAVE MORE RESPECT FOR FLIES NOW? No, I still kill those little motherfuckers all the time. [Laughs] I mean, yes and no. They're still pests. One thing I've learned about flies, though, is that they're remarkably clean. Flies are only gross when you introduce something gross into their diet—like dog shit or a dead raccoon.

DOES THE PAINT HURT THEM? I talked with an entomologist.... The only thing he could come up with was that they're living normal life spans and they're sexually active. So I always joke that if you're living a normal life span and you're sexually active, life's pretty good.

CUT ABOVE: Matt Jennings says charcuterie will be one of the focuses for Townsman.

BACK IN TOWN

MATT JENNINGS COMES HOME TO OPEN TOWNSMAN.

Townsmon
120 Kingston St., Boston
(617-210-4743)
townsmanboston.com

Matt Jennings prefers the term "family man" over "three-time James Beard Award finalist." But both titles seem to fit equally well for the chef/owner of the forthcoming Townsman, opening on the ground floor of Radian in February.

The fingerprints of a few generations of Jennings are on the restaurant. There are his kids, who, now reaching school age, were the impetus for him and his wife, Kate, to close their well-regarded Providence restaurant, Farmstead, and move back to the Boston area. Then there are all those childhood trips across New England that Jennings took with his own father, stopping at diners in New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Connecticut. Those long-ago outings served as the inspiration for the heart of the new restaurant, a 10-seat counter that Jennings calls a crudo bar. It will serve cheeses, charcuterie, tartares, ceviches and raw bar selections—some of the fare that gained Jennings his James Beard recognition.

"It's kind of a tip of the hat to the diner culture of New England," Jennings says. "It was a part of growing up around here. I kind of wanted to extend the philosophy of being able to sit across the counter from whoever is making your food and have a conversation with them about it."

Certain to start some conversations at Townsman are the signature plateaus. Created in the style of a brasserie shellfish tower, the bottom tier will feature seafood preparations such as oysters or clams on the half-shell, seafood terrine or marinated scallops. The second tier will include charcuterie, some made in house, others custom made for Townsman by New England Charcuterie's Joshua Smith. And the plateau will be finished with pickles, relishes and condiments.

"It's kind of all the things I like to eat when I go to a restaurant. I'd order one of these and maybe have a little bread, a couple of beers," Jennings says. "It's definitely for two, or maybe four as an appetizer. It's around $120, but it's very substantial."

There will also be vegetable-driven dishes such as cauliflower and broccoli topped simply with herbs and spices and cooked on the plancha, and an in-house handmade pasta program is planned for lunch and dinner. But Jennings made his bones with meat, which will have a strong presence on the menu.

"We're no stranger to the swine," Jennings says. "We'll be bringing in whole lambs, whole pigs, whole goats. We're doing a lot of butchery in house and showcasing the beautiful meat."

It'll be served in a 100-seat space decked with white subway tile, Parisian wallpaper, recycled paper lights, cement floors and handmade walnut tables. Near the entry is the bar and lounge area, and Jennings hopes to add a remote bar to the patio that sits on the Greenway once spring arrives. While it might have the feel of a beer garden with a trellis and some herbs growing, Jennings stresses that the main beverage focus throughout the restaurant will be seasonal and local cocktails from Sean Frederick (Citizen Public House).

"I think his forte is taking those traditional American drinks and bringing a modern spin to them, having them fresh and reinvented," Jennings says. "And that's really the direction for dinner, dessert and drinks."

TRENDING AT TAVOLO

When chef Nuno Alves made his move to Hawaii, he left some big clogs to fill at Tavolo in Dorchester. Hitting the ground running is newly named chef de cuisine Alex Horowitz, according to manager Colleen Harrison. She first met Horowitz while she was a manager at the Biltmore Bar & Grille in Newton and he was a regular at the local industry favorite. After being hired in September to run the front of the house at Tavolo, Harrison heard Alves was leaving and immediately contacted Horowitz.

Fresh off a five-year stint at Blue Ginger, where he worked his way up to executive sous chef, Horowitz "has had a huge impact, and it's only been a week," Harrison gushes. The red sauce is a little chunkier now, "truer to the tomato," Horowitz explains. His plan is to review the menu with owner Chris Douglass and then overhaul Tavolo's offerings to reflect a "more modern" sensibility. That will include a new charcuterie program, an emphasis on small plates and a renewed focus on local and seasonal ingredients. "I'm no stranger to New England flavors," says the Wellfleet native.

SMOKIN' S'MORES

Where there's smoke, there's not always fire. Sometimes, there's just dessert. Consider S'mores in a Jar, a sweet standout from Menotomy Grill & Tavern pastry chef Jessica Pelletier. When you open the lid, campfire-scented smoke wafts from the short, squat Mason jar, which is filled with brown-butter brownie chunks, shards of Heath bar and toasted, gooey house-made marshmallows, all on a fluffy graham-cracker mousse. And when the smoke clears, a hint of its flavor remains to balance the summery treat. It's not what you might expect to find at Menotomy in Arlington, which is better known for its beer list. But Pelletier, who launched her career at the Ritz-Carlton Boston, brings a finesse to the finishing touches of a dinner that might start with a beautifully made Jerusalem artichoke bisque swirled with tahini from chef Mark Thompson, former chef de cuisine at Chez Henri. A final surprise: The big-enough-to-share s'mores dessert is just $7, so it won't cost you much more than a box of Girl Scout cookies.

BENDING THE BRAIN

THE FOUNDER OF BROOKLINE'S TRAUMA CENTER OFFERS A NEW TAKE ON PTSD.

The Body Keeps the Score* by Bessel van der Kolk
Published by Viking, 464 pages, $28

TRAUMA CAN ALMOST LITERALLY REWIRE the brain: Busy brain scans convey the agitation of flashbacks, while dissociation produces bleak, lonely-looking images. In his latest book, trauma expert Bessel van der Kolk offers wide-ranging scientific information about such effects of war, sexual abuse and other emotional disasters. Medications, he believes, have limited usefulness. What is effective is embodying (and "enlanguaging") the experience to bring the suffering mind, body and brain into a new equilibrium.

One approach, EMDR, guides patients through eye movements during recollections of traumatic experiences, fostering a kind of dreamy, comforting focus. Another, IFS, puts suffering at a bearable distance by compartmentalizing the mind, assigning each part its own memories and functions while offering calming protocols. Neurofeedback teaches self-regulation, measuring brain waves in real time and rewarding desirable responses. Yoga and dance can help bring about groundedness, human connection and even joy, counteracting trauma's hostile takeover of the body. And experiential methods—like play-acting confrontations with abusers—can bring emotional integration. There's even a look at how troubled kids have used Shakespeare as a therapist, exploring the power of their anger through the Bard's plays. Throughout, van der Kolk brilliantly shows how the rational and emotional brain can be brought into balance.

FROM PAGE 51: The drawing depicted what he had seen the day before: an airplane slamming into the tower, a ball of fire, firefighters, and people jumping from the tower's windows. But at the bottom of the picture he had drawn something else.... I had no idea what it was, so I asked him.

"A trampoline," he replied...."So that the next time when people have to jump they will be safe." ◆

GRACE NOTES

THE INN EXPERIENCE IS ELEVATED AT CONNECTICUT'S MAYFLOWER GRACE.

New England inns share a common thread of DNA, harking back to some ur-bed-and-breakfast lost in the Colonial mists. (Somewhere, an archaeologist is at this moment unearthing the remnants of a fresh-baked pastry basket once served to Cotton Mather.) They all have a congenital disposition toward wallpaper. They all sport oriental rugs. Accent pillows, bed skirts, 19th-century bibelots—these are in their very blood.

What makes Connecticut's Mayflower Grace worth visiting are its anomalies: the poet's maze in the garden, the Jonathan Cartwright menu in the restaurant, the spa that seems lifted directly out of Rivendell. This is a New England inn that breaks with the norms, despite its creaking floorboards and fireside reading nooks.

Connecticut's Litchfield Hills are rich with scenic trails, foliage and riches—since the first Gilded Age, they've been a haven for Manhattanites with cash but without the patience to drive all the way to the Berkshires. Set on 58 acres of private gardens and woodland, the Mayflower Grace seems larger on account of an enveloping 3,000 acres of nature preserve. Entering the main house, guests receive a glass of bubbly and a first impression of old wood and oil paintings. The property's bed and breakfast lineage is obvious: A comfortable parlor offers board games and tea, and a drowsy fire crackles in the library. The 30 guest rooms sport distinct decor but have a unifying aesthetic of Yankee elegance. There are four-poster beds and gas fireplaces, of course, but the furnishings get a boost from Frette linens, Limoges bathroom fittings and potted orchids.

As a member of Relais & Châteaux and the Grace chain of luxury properties (readers may know its sisters, the White Barn Grace in Kennebunk and the Vanderbilt Grace in Newport), the Mayflower prides itself, justifiably, on its kitchen. There's the comfortable Tap Room, which is ideal for an afternoon snack of truffle fries and beer, but it's imperative to dine at the house restaurant, Muse by Jonathan Cartwright.

Its conceit is New England flavors executed with European technique, which makes for a very fruitful marriage. A cream of local squash is a masterpiece in the medium of vegetable soup, thanks to inspired use of pumpkin seed oil, apple and sea scallop. Butter-poached lobster gives a nod to Cartwright's work at the White Barn—the pearlescent meat is anchored with smoked corn puree and paprika butter sauce. A thick cut of seared venison is heaven in the form of grass-fed game, the earthiness of the meat blooming with grace notes thanks to a red wine and veal demi-glace. After that crescendo, order the homemade cinnamon doughnuts with cider gel and call it a night, or take a scotch and a dish of local cheeses to the parlor and nurse them over a game of Scrabble.

The next morning, walk off the fumes by exploring the hedges of the American Poets Maze. Dead ends yield plaques inscribed with poems from writers like Emily Dickinson, Robert Frost and Walt Whitman ("O amazement of things! even the least particle!"). Wending out the gate, guests will pass a putting green before finding themselves confronted by a 20,000-square-foot luxury spa. This is the Mayflower's truest glory, and the reason that even the most ambitious hiker is liable to get sidetracked into slippers and a bathrobe.

The centerpiece is the Garden Room, a palatial white parlor dressed with orchids and silver, plus a row of plush chaises set before enormous picture windows. These frame an immaculate lawn running down to a pond and woodland. Lying on the pillows with your feet under a fleece that feels like it's spun from children's laughter and baby rabbits, it's easy to slip into a heavenly vision. Yes, there is a light at the end of the tunnel, and it comes with a cup of herbal tea.

Don't yield to the temptation to nap. The wet areas are artfully designed, fiercely heated and blissful on a winter morning. Once you've built up enough steam, take a peaceful wallow in an indoor pool that overlooks the gardens. Suspended in the warmth, with your eyes awash in beauty, it might strike you that you've really gotten away from it all. ◆

BURNING YEN

A STUNNING TALENT EMERGES AT CHA YEN THAI COOKERY.

CHA YEN THAI COOKERY
613 Mt. Auburn St., Watertown (617-393-0031)
chayenthaicookery.com

HERE AT THE IMPROPER, WE ROUTINELY report on glamorous restaurants where elaborate food and swank cocktails are served to pretty people in beautiful rooms. But we're also food nerds who know that phenomenal cooking doesn't always arrive in a gilded wrapper or the poshest zip codes. If it's special enough, we'll take our readers beyond those downtown neighborhoods that garner most of the food coverage in Boston. What, you ask, could interest us all the way out in Watertown's Coolidge Square? One answer is the thimble-sized Cha Yen Thai Cookery, where an extraordinary young talent named Manita Bunnagitkarn is taking apart traditional Thai cuisine and putting it back together in gorgeous, delicious ways.

Bunnagitkarn's formula appears simple: Start with great ingredients (much of her produce comes from nearby Russo's), honor traditional Thai recipes, but don't be afraid to apply Western fine-dining technique. For instance, her curry puff ($6) kicks the sorry ass of every dull, factory-made Thai turnover you've ever had, filling an exquisite puff-pastry shell with a mound of diced chicken, onions and potatoes delicately seasoned with turmeric. Corn cake ($5) evokes a vegetarian tod mun, using big corn kernels instead of fish paste; the result is a wonderful pile of golden brown, crunchy/chewy fritters, their fine deep-frying nicely underscored with ajat, the sweet-and-sour cucumber/chili relish topped with ground peanuts. Poh piah ($6) takes the common fresh roll to a higher plane by substituting a featherweight housemade crepe for the usual softened rice-paper wrapper, stuffed with mung-bean sprouts, cucumber, tofu, scallion, egg and, if you ask, some Chinese sausage. The pan-risen flatbread roti ($5) is unprepossessing on the plate, looking like a scallion-free scallion pancake, but has a sublimely light yet chewy texture and a smashing massaman curry of minced sweet potatoes.

Soups echo a theme here of intricate, distinctive flavors rising above pedestrian formula: I can't remember a better tasting tom yum soup ($4), with its bracing acidity and subtle but insistent chili heat, or the similarly far-above-average galangal soup ($4) with shrimp, boasting a creamy coconut-milk base, mushrooms and heady aromas of galangal and lemongrass. A variety of mushrooms provides the foundation for a superbly original version of larb ($8), a vivid salad of red onions, fresh chilies, leaves of mint and holy basil, and crunchy toasted rice powder.

Noodle dishes likewise transcend ordinariness with striking details, like the careful char on the wide rice noodles with Chinese broccoli in see ew with pork ($8.50) or the two-day preparation of duck breast slices in the sukothai ($10), thin egg noodles artfully bedecked with ground peanuts, sugar, duck, sliced fish cake, fish balls, scallions and a perfect soft-boiled egg, all stirred together by the customer. Grilled calamari ($7) takes a skillfully thin-sliced body of a fist-sized squid, plus whole clumps of tentacles, and puts excellent char on the exterior while keeping it tenderly undercooked within: an impressive balancing act, a seafood cooking coup.

If you'd guess by now that entrees might reflect similarly extraordinary care in preparation and clarity of flavors, you'd be right. A stir-fry of eggplant basil with duck ($10) brings an intriguing interplay of fierce Thai basil, sweet and hot chilies, and chunks of al dente Chinese eggplant. Pla pad kun chai ($10) stir-fries cod fillets with classic Thai aromatics (ginger, lemongrass, shallots) plus a few bright fresh chilies for heat, though some customers may want to reach for the relish caddy, adding its toasted chili flakes, prik nam pla (fish sauce, lime juice, chilies), chili-infused rice vinegar and/or sugar to highlight their own preferences.

Beverage options include, again, terrific versions of familiar drinks like Thai iced tea ($2.95) and iced coffee ($2.95), neither cloyingly sweet as is typical, and fresh coconut juice ($2.95) with slices of coconut meat. Bunnagitkarn even makes her own ice cream, hard-packed half-scoops in little plastic tubs ($2.50), including novel flavors like Thai tea, though coffee and vanilla also sing when allowed to soften.

The level of skill and inventiveness on display in the flavors and lovely platings here would not feel out of place in a Back Bay bistro with white tablecloths and cossetting service, but Cha Yen operates out of a simple storefront with a single communal table and a few counter seats in the window. Service duties are shared by the chef and her lieutenants. That partly accounts for the ridiculous bargain prices, and perhaps how under-the-radar the place has managed to stay despite being open since July. Much like Tim Maslow early on—another brilliant young chef who caught fire working Asian idioms in an obscure, humble outpost in Watertown—Bunnagitkarn's current fans include a few intrepid Chowhound types and lucky neighbors coming by for takeout. But this secret won't last long. Now might be a good time to get over to Cha Yen yourself, so you can say you loved Manita's cooking before she became famous. ◆

Q: WHAT IS THE BEST TYPE OF PRODUCT REGIMEN FOR SKIN?

A: At SkinHealth, we believe there are 5 essential product components to achieve healthy, vibrant skin: sunscreen, retinols, anti-oxidants, peptides, and glycolic acid.

Retinols, a form of vitamin A; and peptides, which are protein fragments, repair the skin. Anti-oxidants, such as vitamin C, green tea and CoQ10; and sunscreens protect our skin. Glycolic acid provides exfoliation so the other products can penetrate the skin to work their magic.

These products may be used individually, or, if you prefer fewer steps and a streamlined regimen, we offer products that combine two or three of the components.

Skin care products must be properly formulated to penetrate deeply and must contain an adequate concentration of ingredients to make a noticeable difference in the health and appearance of your skin. At SkinHealth, we have spent many years perfecting our results-oriented line of advanced skin care products. We invite you to come in and see for yourself, or you may purchase on-line at: www.shopskinhealth.com.

WEEKEND WARRIOR

MARION COTILLARD OFFERS A HEARTRENDING PLEA FOR COMPASSION.

Belgian brothers Jean-Pierre and Luc Dardenne have been writing and directing spare, downbeat dramas together for nearly 30 years. Their protagonists—blue-collar victims of circumstance—have almost always been grounded by the routine of their work. Their jobs serve as stabilizing constants; disrupt the routine, and the house of cards they've patched together crumbles, their identities collapsing with it.

That's true of the brothers' newest, musicless masterpiece, Two Days, One Night. Today's economy has destabilized the jobs that give the Dardennes' characters their sense of meaning. But instead of fostering solidarity, the self-serving bosses (including one particularly repulsive supervisor played by Dardenne regular Olivier Gourmet) pit the workers against one another, leaving them with impossible decisions.

When we first observe Sandra Bya (Marion Cotillard), she's lying in bed, the ringing of her phone barely waking her from a Xanax-induced haze. A handheld camera (a Dardenne staple) tracks her through the small middle-class apartment she shares with her loving husband, Manu (Fabrizio Rongione)—a blue-collar cook—and their two children.

Sandra is ill-equipped for her current situation, one that gradually comes to light as the Dardennes drip-feed the facts surrounding her dilemma and she interacts, one by one, with members of the large supporting cast, many of whom—in typical Dardenne fashion—have never acted before. But first, Sandra abruptly hangs up the phone on her friend and co-worker, Juliette (Catherine Salée), telling herself after, "You mustn't cry."

As we'll come to discover, Sandra is being laid off after a recent hospitalization for depression—a condition that is being triggered again, if her uncontrollable crying and unwillingness to leave bed are any evidence.

However, through Juliette's efforts, their employer Dumont (Baptiste Sornin) has agreed to let Sandra keep her job at his small solar-panel company—but only if a majority of her 16 fellow employees agree to forgo their 1,000 euro bonus. Sandra has a weekend to convince her co-workers to save her position, or she and her family will be forced into public housing.

Sandra doesn't convince the first person she contacts. Although discouraged, she successfully appeals to the second, Kader (Ben Hamidou); heart racing and spirits lifted, she swallows her pride and continues.

The Dardennes are notorious for following their protagonists from behind, with their longtime cinematographer, Alain Marcoen, framing his handheld shots behind their subjects' heads, allowing us to peer over their shoulders and experience life as they see it. (Other filmmakers, like Darren Aronofsky with 2008's The Wrestler, have—ahem—borrowed this stylistic flourish.) But no more.

Working for the first time with an international star in a lead role, rather than the nonprofessionals they've typically plucked from obscurity, they capitalize on Cotillard's deeply expressive face, downplaying her natural beauty and finding a fractured psyche within her eyes. In shifting their usual point of view and placing their unflinching gaze squarely on the face of a seasoned professional, the Dardennes have captured one of the most naturalistic performances in a directing career known for cultivated kitchen-sink realism. And for her efforts, Cotillard has earned her second Oscar nomination for Best Actress, after winning the golden statuette for her performance as Edith Piaf in 2007's La Vie en Rose. Less showy, this is even stronger work.

Waking from a nightmare in the passenger seat of the family car as Manu drives her from one co-worker's residence to another, Sandra pops another Xanax—a source of ongoing concern for her incredible husband, who has as much faith in his wife as she does in her pills.

Sandra finds Timur (Timur Magomedgadzhiev) on a soccer field, where the young man coaches children on the weekends; seeing her on the sidelines, he breaks down, placing his hands on hers as he buckles over sobbing. "I'm really glad you're here," he tells her through his tears before admitting, "I feel ashamed that I agreed to vote for my bonus." He agrees to give it up for her sake.

If only everyone else was in a position to be so compassionate. Turned down earlier over the phone by Hicham (Hicham Slaoui), Sandra runs into him at a convenience store, discovering that he works a second job there to help provide for his family.

"I'm sorry," he says, reiterating that he's unable to help. "It's a year's worth of gas and electric bills."

The harsh truth of the film is that most of these people aren't selfish; they're simply struggling to get by, like so many people are. Whether that bonus is earmarked for utilities or children's tuition, mortgages or home upkeep, it's something that's not easily given up.

And we witness this, time and again, as the Dardennes are steadfast in showing us each encounter. Although most begin cordially, nearly every permutation plays out differently, and unexpectedly. Fists are thrown, more Xanax are popped, and one woman even decides to leave her husband. "I've never decided anything for myself before," says Anne (Christelle Cornil), who doesn't start the weekend as one of Sandra's closer friends, but becomes one as it wears on.

While I'm loath to tell you how this film turns out, it's not nearly as depressing as it sounds. For 95 minutes, we're exposed to some of the best and worst of humanity, as well as the sad state of how many businesses are now run. But it's the kindness and generosity that you'll remember—and the changes of heart that don't come frequently enough. ◆

SPIRIT TO MELODY

SHY SONGBIRD TAKES FLIGHT IN FAST-RISING WISCONSIN BAND.

PHOX CONVEYS NATURAL GRACE AS A moodily atmospheric folk-pop group. But frontwoman Monica Martin, whose languid voice wafts through the sextet's sepia-toned textures, was never a natural when it came to performing.

"I didn't sing in front of people because it scared me," says Martin, 25, who grew up in the tiny Wisconsin city of Baraboo along with her bandmates. "I was just terribly shy. My anxieties were crippling, to be quite honest. They still trouble me, but I'm getting a lot better. My life and my heart have changed so much."

Indeed, a lot has changed during the past two years for Phox, who went from an early appearance at London's iTunes Festival to shows at the Newport Folk Festival and in Boston, where the group plays Brighton Music Hall on Valentine's Day.

Martin was in her late teens, dating guitarist/trumpeter Matt Holmen, when he first heard her sing, harmonizing to a CD in the car. "He was like, 'What was that?!'" she recalls with a laugh from Wisconsin. "Five years later, I finally caved and said, 'Fine, I'll sing in front of someone.'" Holmen had just started playing with their future bandmates, and they needed a singer.

"The thing about Baraboo is even if you don't know someone intimately, you know them," Martin says. She had taken a math class with keyboardist Matteo Roberts, whose brother Dave plays drums. Multi-instrumentalist Zach Johnston and bassist Jason Krunnfusz had been grade school chums of Holmen and Roberts. But the defining factor in the band's formation came when they all leased a house in nearby Madison.

Martin had been to beauty school and was working in a hair salon. "I didn't know what you had to do to function as a music group, and I was fairly lethargic," she says. "If we all lived in different places and we had to plan a meeting or get together to practice, it never would have happened. You can't say, 'No, I've got an appointment,' and the answer is 'No, you're in the living room and watching TV.'"

The group began to produce and distribute music and videos, taking advantage of various members' skill sets. Johnston had worked as a filmmaker, Holmen was a graphic designer into animation, Dave Roberts was an audio engineer, and Martin did photography. "We all had our hands in different facets of art that are essential to putting together your media," she says. "It sounds very businessy, but it didn't feel like that, because it was just something that we gravitated toward anyway."

"I was like, 'Wow, someone's voice does that thing that my voice does, but it sounds nice.'"

Band members' broad musical tastes range from pop to classical, though Martin says they can all agree on orchestral indie-pop auteur Sufjan Stevens and progressive string band the Punch Brothers as artists they like. Raised on soul and Motown, Martin was inspired by Feist, Regina Spektor, Fiona Apple and—vocally, in part because of similar tonal breaks in her phrasing—Brandi Carlile. "I was like, 'Wow, someone's voice does that thing that my voice does, but it sounds nice.'"

Songwriting posed another challenge on the road to Phox's eponymous 2014 debut, as Martin wrote tunes she "didn't think anyone was going to hear," laced with fragmented references to both family and romantic relationships.

"A melody will come to me, and there's already a spirit to the melody," Martin says. "Is it sad? Is it hopeful? And at the same time, I'm always writing down my thoughts." Next, the singer presents her sketches to the rest of the band, usually through Holmen, who she calls "my go-to person, my platonic life partner." She'll flesh out bridges with Matteo Roberts or Johnston, while members add accents such as the banjo, clarinet and whistling in "Slow Motion," one of the album's highlights. "We start working on it acoustically—and work on harmonies," she says. "Then it becomes a hot mess where everyone throws every idea in, and we reduce it."

Songs for a follow-up are "in utero," Martin says. "I'm already starting to play the songs in a casual way to the boys," she offers. That, she says with a knowing confidence, "is something that never would have happened two years ago." ◆

VISION QUEST

LASIK IS A REAL EYE-OPENER.

MY EYES WENT BAD IN HIGH SCHOOL, a fact uncovered by a startled driver's ed instructor who realized that I couldn't see more than 10 feet beyond the hood of his Dodge Aries. Thus ensued many years of contact lens-related adventures, including a half-blind taxi ride with a lens in my mouth until I could find some saline. I guess I could've worn glasses more often, but somehow every pair of glasses made me look like I should be wearing a turtleneck and eating fondue.

Contacts weren't perfect, but I could live with them. That is, until I couldn't. Sometime last fall, I realized that my contacts were never comfortable, my eyes fully at war with my Focus Dailies. So I decide to get evaluated for Lasik, which requires wearing glasses for two weeks—apparently, contacts deform your eyes and can throw off the measurements. It's a long two weeks.

Ever try skiing in glasses? It's like trying to drive through the Blizzard of '78 with no windshield wipers or defroster. Going for a run becomes a form of cross-training, as your arms are heavily involved in keeping your glasses on your sweaty face. You can't wear sunglasses. You're blind in the shower. At all turns, you're reminded that your daily business depends on a medical device worn by Ben Franklin. By the end of the second week, you're just dying for someone to slice open your eyeballs with a laser beam.

The pre-op exam goes well, and about a week later I'm back in the waiting room watching an informational video narrated by actor Brad Maule, aka Dr. Tony Jones from General Hospital. Brad Maule—who, in the video, is dressed like a doctor—wants you to know that while this is a common procedure, there may still be risks and complications. And if there are complications, you won't cure them by having a nice dream, as once actually happened to a character on General Hospital.

HINDSIGHT IS 20/20: Why did I wait to long to get lasered?

I'm handed a series of forms to fill out, but nobody looks at them. I know this because, in response to a question about my expectations, I write, "I hope to be able to spot mice and small rodents from several hundred feet in the air." Even if you own a quality hang glider, that kind of outcome is probably unrealistic.

Eventually the wait is over. Stickers denoting right and left are placed on my forehead (thus preventing any "My right or your right?" mishaps), and I'm given a Valium to help me cope with what's ahead. Except it doesn't really have time to kick in, so as I'm wheeled under the first machine—let's call it the See-Saw 5000—I'm far too sober and coherent. The machine motors down to my face and suctions itself to my eye like a giant carnivorous mecha-octopus. My eyelid is propped open, the eyeball numbed with drops. There's no quitting now, even as my vision goes black—it feels like the machine is actually pressing on my eyeball, but maybe it's the suction. Then, through the blackness, I see a red crosshatch pattern scanning my eye, zipping back and forth. The laser's cutting my eye open, making the flap that they'll pull back so the second laser can go inside and reshape the cornea, essentially putting my prescription inside my eye. If this sounds gruesome, it's at least better than the alternate technique for making the flap, which involves what one of my friends described as "a deli slicer coming down on your eyeball."

"I hope to be able to spot mice and small rodents from several hundred feet in the air."

The doctor asks me some questions, and I grunt out "Uhh huhhhh" or "Naaaa," as if I'm at the dentist. Somehow I'm worried that actually unclenching my jaw will allow my eyeballs to fall into my mouth, like what happened to Geena Davis in Beetlejuice. It's possible that the Valium is working now.

In any case, I don't care how high you are: It's pretty freaky to watch someone pull your eye open with tweezers. And it's not like you can decide not to watch—your eyelids are propped open. You're seeing this whether you want to or not. Open flap, laser zap, close flap, repeat. Then you're done. Fifteen minutes and it's over.

It's not like you can get Lasik'd at the drive-through while you wait for your soy latte, but for a life-changing medical procedure this is about as quick and easy as it gets. No, it's not for everyone, but if you've ever mistakenly drank your contact lenses or lost your glasses or blundered around a blurry hotel room in the morning, then Lasik starts to look pretty appealing. I went into the operating room wondering why I was doing this, but by the next morning—vision already 20/15—I was asking myself why I ever waited. ◆

The Dance / John D. Spooner

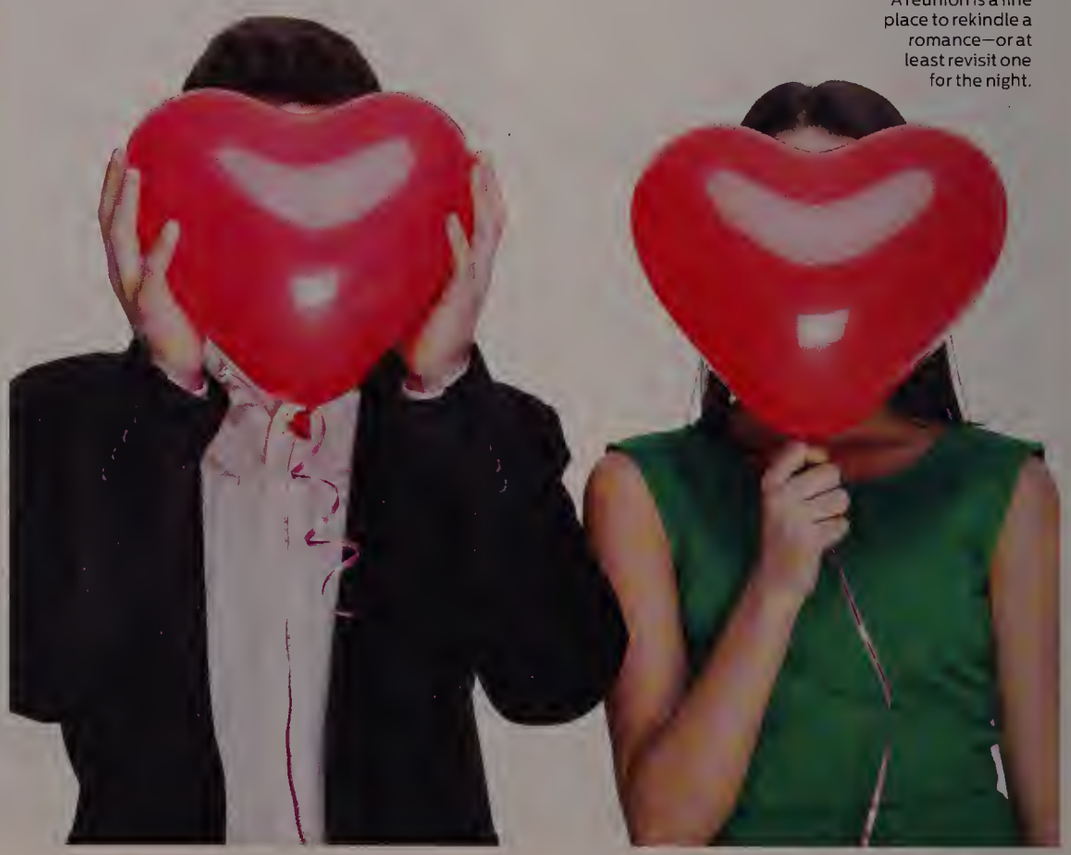
TAKE HEART

SOUND ADVICE ON REUNION ROMANCE AND DATING DESTINATIONS



JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe No. 1 best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I'm planning to go to my 25th high school reunion in the spring. I'm not married and I've learned that my old boyfriend from those days is getting a divorce and will be coming as well. I'm really nervous about seeing the old classmates, particularly my boyfriend. If I find I'm still attracted to him, how should I play it? Do you think sex with him would be wise or foolish? Most people who go to reunions—usually held in reception rooms of hotels where you'd never want to stay—take a look around and say to themselves, "Who are all these old people?" And maybe everybody else is saying the same thing about us. How did this happen?

Remember that almost everybody else who goes to your reunion will have the same anxieties. So buy a new dress, show no weakness and realize that there will be two or three people, perhaps even people you didn't know very well, who will be a wonderful surprise, and you'll be glad you went.

As for your old boyfriend, you may be horrified at his appearance or really pleased that someone who was your old boyfriend has stayed so youthful. And if you're both happily surprised—and you're certainly still young enough to feel the flame—then perhaps sex might be a good idea. Just make sure you do it in the back seat of his father's car. For old times' sake.

I'm about to have a blind date, and I know from my emails that she likes fancy specialty cocktails like planter's punch. I'm not much of a drinker, and I'm afraid of getting too tipsy if I keep up with her. But I don't want to seem like a dweeb. What do you suggest? If all is fair in love and war, as the old saying goes, I would go early to the bar and make a deal with the bartender. Tell him or her that you'll be generous with your tip but that you would like plain water in an old-fashioned glass, on the rocks with a couple of olives. If your date orders a second punch or mai tai, just say, "Same martini again for me." After she's had two real ones and you had two waters, it's probably OK for you to have a beer—but with this sobriety, make sure you act like a gentleman. If there is a second date, and you enjoy each other, it'll be OK to be honest about your drinking habits.

HELLO AGAIN: A reunion is a fine place to rekindle a romance—or at least revisit one for the night.

I'm sick of taking dates to conventional places like movies or clubs, and I tend to be romantic. Any ideas for a setting that perhaps not many people would think of? I'm particularly interested in women with a lot of brainpower. I think you'd have wonderful luck in the pursuit of romance with one of three places, all special to Boston. One is the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, particularly in the late afternoon in the winter. As the day grows darker, a walk through the courtyard of flowers and the galleries reveals a magical spot, a place for holding hands and maybe a kiss in a quiet corner. It's a perfect place to bring you both back 100 years. If there is a concert on, it would only add to the adventure.

The second spot I would pick is the Boston Athenæum at the top of Beacon Hill. It is a private library and one of the most beautiful buildings in America. You can call them to ask about membership options or having a tour before you consider joining. Any smart person would be impressed and amazed at the splendor of the place. After wandering the library, with the right mood having been established, you can pop across the street to the bar at XV Beacon Hotel for a drink and another handhold.

The final place I'd try is the Harvard Museum of Natural History. There are more than a dozen of rooms and exhibits, from dinosaurs and stuffed animals to geodes and the world's greatest collection of glass flowers—endless variations on what the natural world has to offer. Even every manner of bug, if you want to go in that direction. And all the restaurants of Harvard Square are only a short walk away.

If you are indeed romantic by nature, any one of these settings would certainly help do the job for you.

Why is the stock market so good when the news is so bad? I've been saying and writing for some time that the news, folks, is going to be terrible every day for the rest of your lives. But if you're in business, you're not in a fetal position underneath your desk. You're trying to reinvent yourself and working harder to be profitable and productive, to beat the competition. Much of the daily bad news has little or nothing to do with you or your family, or even your business, for that matter. As for the progress in U.S. stock markets in the past few years, I can credit several things: the depressed levels of interest rates, the quite strong condition of corporate balance sheets and the disbelief on the part of many investors in these rising markets, resulting in trillions of dollars in money funds and CDs at almost zero rates of return.

Historically, in my view, markets always surprise us in both directions. When sentiment is anxious or fearful, as it is now, markets can provide the best bargains. Conversely, periods of greed are often the best time to start exiting these investments. I believe in behavioral interpretation of market movements, and I have often found that when I feel my stomach slightly churning with worry, it's probably time to be doing some buying. ◆

Soroff On / Jay Harrington

BETTER OFF JAY

THE SEASONED SITCOM ACTOR SOUNDS OFF ON THE BRUINS, BOSTON ACCENTS AND HIS ECLECTIC RESUME.

VETERAN SITCOM ACTOR JAY HARRINGTON, 43, WAS raised in Wellesley and attended Wellesley High School before studying acting at Syracuse University. He spent several years doing stage work in New York before moving to Los Angeles. Best known for his title role in the ABC comedy Better Off Ted, he has also appeared on shows such as Coupling, Desperate Housewives, Hot in Cleveland, The Inside and Private Practice. His movie credits include American Reunion, True Love, Partner(s), Whatever It Takes, Anywhere but Here and the locally produced The Love Guide. He has also lent his voice to the animated feature A Monster in Paris. His latest role was Phil, a public defender and avid gambler, on the USA comedy Benched, and he'll appear in the upcoming indie drama Hey Brother, hitting screens in 2015.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Are you a big gambler?
JAY HARRINGTON: I'm actually pretty good at it. Put it this way: I get an email twice a week from the Hard Rock asking when I'm coming back.

Seriously? Yeah. But the first time I went to Vegas, I brought $200 with me. I thought if I only brought that much, what was the worst that could happen? I was down $200 in about 40 minutes, and I had no bank card, no credit card. So I just walked around the casino, and I remember seeing David Schwimmer at the craps table. It was at the height of Friends, and I remember thinking, "I want to be him someday."

One thing you'd like to erase from your resume? Because I look like such a weirdo, an episode of Star Trek: Voyager. I played the assistant to Donny Most. I had all these prosthetics, this weird nose thing, and it took a really long time to do it. Nothing against Star Trek or Happy Days, but that's one.

Do you wish your name was Ted Crisp? It is a great name. They can put it on my tombstone in parentheses.

American Reunion*: Unfairly overlooked by the Academy? [Laughs] It was unfairly overlooked by pretty much everyone. I think maybe 10 people saw that movie. I was surprised it didn't do better.

Biggest lie on your acting resume? My one day that I filled in on Tony 'n Tina's Wedding for a traveling show in New Jersey. I made it look like I was on a national tour or something.

Biggest interview faux pas? I swore during Home & Family on the Hallmark Channel, which is like all moms and grandmas in the audience. I think I referred to my character as a "jerk-off." Didn't go over so well.

Person you get mistaken for most often? People say I remind them of George Clooney, or John Hamm, sometimes. If I was a little thinner, Adam Levine. I don't see any of it, but it's flattering.

Not bad. So tell me about Portia de Rossi. She is hilarious. And she's so real, for someone who could put on airs or do whatever she wants. I love her.

"I remember seeing David Schwimmer at the craps table.... I remember thinking, 'I want to be him someday.'"

Favorite show on TV? Mad Men. I've watched it since day one, and I can't wait for it to come back.

Fantasy love scene partner? I'm thinking of my girlfriend here, and I don't want her to get pissed off. So I think I'll go with Ellen DeGeneres.

Thing about Boston you miss the most when you're in L.A.? Besides family and friends, I think the Cape in the summer and fall. I was lucky enough the past two years to do back-to-back movies here in the fall.

Sport you'd most like to play? Ice hockey. I'm a huge Bruins fan. The Bruins logo is my screen saver on my phone.

Favorite athlete? Right now, for everything he encompasses, it's got to be [Tom] Brady. The guy's almost my age. When you're a sports fan and you're watching these kids in their 20s, you start to feel like the old guy. So when there's someone close to your age and they're still doing it, and at that level, it's just amazing. He loves his wife and his family. He just seems like a fundamentally decent guy. I think we need more of that in sports.

If you weren't an actor, what would you do? Unfortunately, I'm not good enough to play hockey professionally. I think if I'd harnessed my ADD and learned to study well, I could have been a lawyer. My mom says I can argue anything.

Best audition disaster story? I threw up, not too long ago, either, at USA. It was a show that did not make it to air. I'd had food poisoning on a Wednesday, and the audition was on Friday. In two days, I had lost maybe 10 pounds. It was awful, but by Friday, I was thinking I was OK. It was me and two other guys, going up for the main role in a pilot that I thought was great. I'm thinking, "This is the one." The lights were really intense, and I started. The adrenaline kicked in, which is usually good, but then I started to feel that cold flop sweat and I started feeling faint. I said, "Excuse me. I have to leave." And I went straight to the bathroom and threw up.

Role you auditioned for and didn't get but really wanted? The Playboy Club. I thought that was going to be network's answer to Mad Men. The original script was really, really good, and dark. I was one of the first people they saw, and I was devastated that I didn't get it. But thank God. I dodged a bullet.

Weirdest thing about L.A.? It can be pouring, but you still need to wear sunglasses, because it's always so bright out.

Weirdest thing about Boston? The fact that we're still living on streets that were designed for horse and buggy.

How's your Boston accent? After a few drinks, it's pretty good, but it's not really in my wheelhouse. My dad kinda had one, but I don't have a great accent. I just sort of throw a "wicked" in there every few words.

Funniest person you've ever worked with? Andrea Anders and Eliza Coupe are tied, because they're both female leads on shows I worked on, they're both very pretty, and yet have the dirtiest trucker mouths and say the filthiest things imaginable. They're hilarious. ◆

"I have a bunch of old American flags in my shop, and I just can't keep them in stock. This one's a 50-star, but I try to get the 48-star flags, or lower, because automatically that dates it back at least 60 years; it's a little more interesting. [For] a lot of that stuff, it's going to more hole-in-the-wall rural areas where people don't have the appreciation for it, because there's just so much of it around."

"The skulls I find on eBay. What I found, and this is a little bit of an insider tip, is that when you're looking for things that have become a little trendy, whether it's industrial salvage or taxidermy or animal skulls, if you use those buzzwords, the person who owns it understands the value. So when I go on eBay, I'll just search 'animal' and see what comes up. And you'll have to search through a lot more, but you'll find a person who's like 'Oh, I've just got this animal skull. I don't know—I'm going to sell it.'"

JUSTIN POWER OF PIONEER GOODS CO. // PIONEERGOODSCO.COM

"I was selling these in my shop and every time I would sell one I'd kind of miss it when it was gone. These are something that kind of borders on kitsch and maybe if I had 100 of them it would be kind of odd, but when you have two I think it works."

press tray, they would keep the letters in them. I started seeing them out at Brimfield at the big antique show, in bulk. I thought that maybe I'd repurpose it, or make a table top out of it. So I bought one and put it in my store to see if it would sell, and when we got married in October I brought it up to the wedding to use to put different messages in."

JUSTIN POWER SPENT MUCH OF HIS CHILDHOOD being dragged to yard sales and antique auctions. "My mom would trick me and say, 'Oh, maybe we'll find some old toys or an old baseball glove or something,' and of course we never would," Power laughs. "But now, doing what I do, it was all like impromptu training."

That training has come in handy at Pioneer Goods Co., Power's South End home decor and furniture shop specializing in high-quality reclaimed and refurbished Americana. Its rustic aesthetic also runs through Power's small but impeccably decorated Malden home, which the newlywed shares with his wife.

"I like things that are old, that tell a story," he explains. "I like to try to take my time and go to antique shops, thrift stores and markets and find that one-of-a-kind thing." Every inch of storage space is filled with salvaged goods waiting to be reinvented. A pile of lumber, picked up from an old church in Southie, sits in his front yard. One day, it will probably find new life as a table. "I can appreciate the value in that 'trash,' so to speak," he says.

Take his coffee table, an old factory cart from Indiana. "It was used to haul around whatever junk they had in their factory for years," he says. "Something was painted on it once upon a time, and all these spills and stains and stuff were part of what this thing did."

Just about every item in Power's home tells a story, and he encourages customers to tell their own stories through home design. "You don't have to make your house look like a catalogue. That's nice, and your house will look nice, but it's not going to reflect your personality," he says. "I'll often tell people that even if they don't know it, they have a style. From the way you dress to how you decorate. Try to hone in on that and then build it out from there. Stay true to who you are."

Mistakes? You might make them. Power is sure he has. "Maybe you'll look back and cringe, but it's like, shit, I went for it," he says with a laugh. "At least I didn't play it safe."

ERIC PORTNOY OF ROOM 68 // ROOM68ONLINE.COM

ERIC PORTNOY CAN TRACE AT LEAST ONE of his artistic awakenings—he's had a few—to a Joseph Beuys and Andy Warhol exhibit he visited at the MFA some years ago. "In the middle of the floor was a cardboard box covered in what just looked like dried-up puke, and people were all standing around it going, 'This is hideous, this is ugly,' but I just got it," he remembers. "That it got people thinking and talking and it challenged them—that was really instrumental in [my] taking on new objects and new forms and being interested in art."

That interest drives Room 68, the contemporary furniture and home design store Portnoy opened in 2011 in Jamaica Plain with business partner Brent Refsland. They've since opened a second location in Provincetown, and they recently closed the JP shop to focus on further expansion. Portnoy's JP home—bright and airy, marked by bold primary colors and unique accent pieces that demand closer inspection—reflects Room 68's attention to the melding of form and function, art and design.

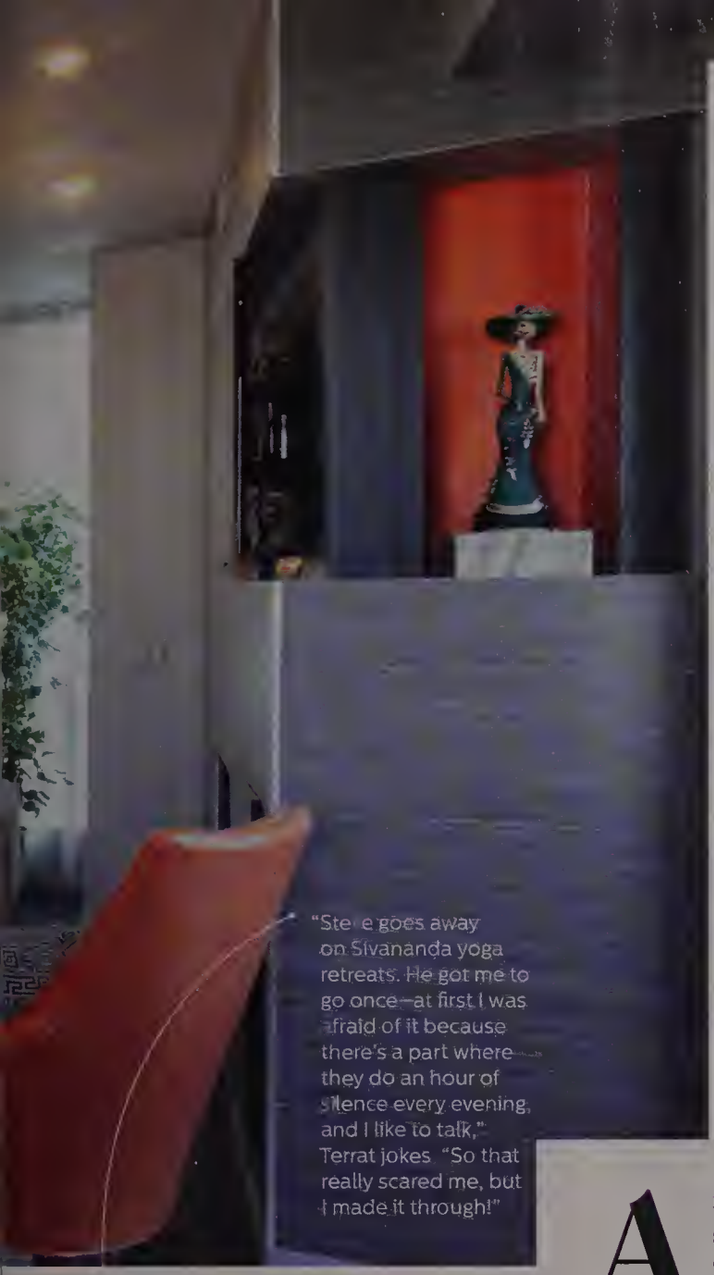
"What I've specialized in is functional art," Portnoy says of his home's design. "It doesn't have to be precious. I don't want to live in a museum; I want to live in a home. But I also want it to be fun and inspiring, and it's about finding that line."

And while Portnoy is conscious of minding that line, his personal style is also about blurring them. "I like balances and mixes of material, whether it's glass and metal, or fiberglass, whatever it is," he says. "It's always evolving, and I love that! I'm constantly playing and moving and balancing."

These days, he continues, he's all about taking chances. "I'm learning ... to play around with color. Express yourself, be a little out there—don't be afraid. My mother, the other day, said to me, 'You are straight, right?'" He laughs. "It's just what I like. It doesn't make me more masculine or less masculine. It's [about] not being afraid to step off a ledge once in a while, and be vulnerable."

"These are by a woman from France who's living in Providence [Sophie Hones of DesignLaboratoire]. She makes them out of recycled bicycle inner tubes. They're just so wonderfully sculptural, but also very utilitarian. You can throw your feet up on them; you can sit on them."

"This is a designer [Paul Cunningham of Leather Head] who I saw in New York and then at an American-made event here. They're so beautiful."



out in Brooklyn wit d when he spot- k of egg cartons, bo dirty string, on lugged them a night, across the Br oklyn Bridge and through barrooms, to bring them home to Boston. He plans to make a mold and use "some ort of lightweight concrete foam material, still to be researched, that will create the form exactly but at a ght that is practical. A limited-number production [run will be] inscribed with the date, time and exact ocation it was f und."

Steve Elbaz's friend Ramon Vega is the photographer. "We needed someth[illegible] great wall and [illegible] told him [illegible]

This sculpture is a representation of La Calavera Catrina, an iconic image by Mexican artist José Guadalupe Posada. Elbaz bought it years before meeting his Mexican-born partner, Fernando Rangel. "It's a coincidence," Ra[illegible]el says with a smile. "It's meant to be!" amend[illegible] Terrat.

"Steve goes away on Sivananda yoga retreats. He got me to go once—at first I was afraid of it because there's a part where they do an hour of silence every evening, and I like to talk," Terrat jokes. "So that really scared me, but I made it through!"

ANDREW TERRAT OF MITCHELL GOLD + BOB WILLIAMS // MITCHELLGOLDBOSTON.COM

Andrew Terrat and Steve Elbaz are so close, they practically share a home. The friends and co-owners of Boston's Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams—Back Bay's sleek home furnishing mecca—are both real estate junkies, which is why, when Terrat spotted the new townhouses going up in an industrial part of South Boston, he immediately put down a deposit on one. Elbaz put one down on the unit next door.

Ultimately, Terrat decided not to move in to the four-story townhouse—"I wanted something on one floor; I'm kind of lazy," he chuckles. But he suggested they flip the units, selling Elbaz's so Elbaz could move into the "better one," which Terrat designed.

The spacious townhouse, marked by razor-sharp lines and polished surfaces, is "masculine, rich in color and texture," says Terrat, who admits that his influence—neutral grays, interesting textures—is everywhere. However, as the apartment unfolds, you see signs of Elbaz's own aesthetic, including vibrant pops of orange, his favorite color.

"Steve and I get along and we agree on most things, but he's much more practical. I'm definitely more about wanting things to look great all the time—and I think this ended up being a really great combination of both," Terrat says. "He usually covers the counter with a cloth because he doesn't want to scratch the marble, and I'm always giving him a hard time, like 'Oh, get rid of that cloth, it's so beautiful!'"

"We use every room in the house," Elbaz says of the home he now shares with his partner, Fernando Rangel. "It's not like our parents' house where we can't go into that room, the fancy living room."

And while practicality is key, so are calming details. "Our home also has to be a sort of sanctuary," Elbaz says. A spiritually minded yoga buff, he keeps a Buddhist altar in the bedroom, where he meditates for 20 minutes each morning. Subtle Buddha sculptures similarly reveal themselves in tucked-away corners.

"Sculpture is fun because you can place it anywhere. It can be on a cocktail table, it can be in the hall, it can be on the floor and still look cool," Terrat says. But he adds there's no need to try to fill every nook. "Less is more—a few good things instead of trying to fill up a whole apartment with low quality. And add little things as you go. Your first place doesn't need to be full. Right now a minimal look is really kind of a chic look."

MAKE IT OR BREAK IT

PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOSH CAMPBELL

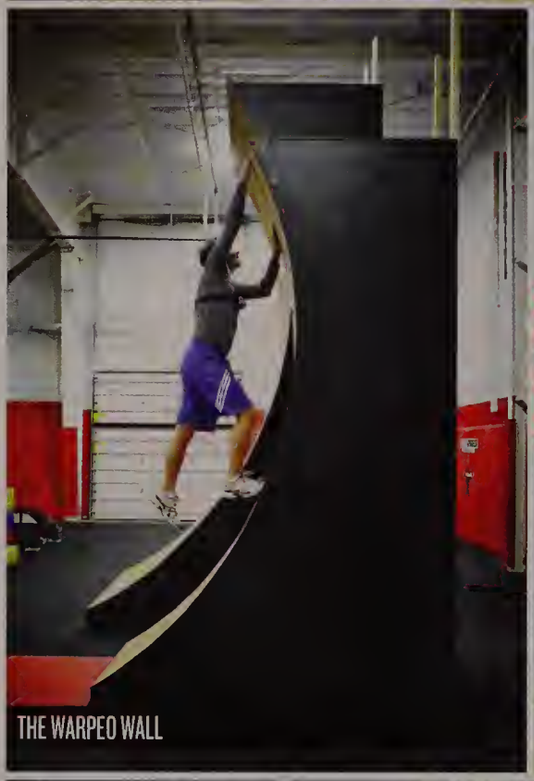
VINCE KLAPPER HAS SPENT A LOT OF HIS LIFE CLIMBING WALLS AND BACK-FLIPPING OFF TRASH CANS. "WHEN I WAS LIKE 14, I TOLD MY MOM, 'I'M GOING TO BE A NINJA WHEN I GROW UP,'" KLAPPER SAYS. "AND SHE WAS LIKE, 'ABSOLUTELY, GO AHEAD, YOU CAN DO IT.'" »

She was right. In 2007, Klapper found a word to describe his crazy stunts: parkour. He then spent four years serving in the Marines, including more than two years stationed in Japan—where he became an even bigger fan of the Japanese TV show Ninja Warrior. After returning stateside, he became a parkour instructor, and he recently took his high-flying ways to TD Garden as a member of the Celtics' dunk team. And last year, he brought his YOLO spirit to TV, appearing on season six of the U.S. iteration, American Ninja Warrior.

Now he's combining his love for both parkour and the show as the lead instructor—sorry, make that "master sensei"—at Gymja Warrior, a playground for American Ninja fanatics that opened early this year in Danvers.

"We really wanted to dedicate this to Ninja Warrior and parkour, and leave nothing out," Klapper says. The space replicates much of what you see on the show: the running steps, three different sizes of the warped wall, the double salmon ladder, swinging ropes, hanging rings and the spider wall. Name an obstacle, and the Gymja folks can likely mimic it or plan to introduce it in the future. Daily classes cater to kids, but the facility also aims to lure workout warriors with nightly adult classes and open gym times, capitalizing on the trend toward extreme workouts like CrossFit and events such as Tough Mudder and Spartan Race.

It's all the brainchild of Shahab Afsharian, who matches Klapper's rugged spirit with an entrepreneurial one. Afsharian was likewise a fan of American Ninja Warrior, often watching with his three children, all under age 7; the next day he'd observe them trying to crown the next Ninja Warrior at the park. And when a parkour expert competed on the show, it only upped the excitement for his kids. So Afsharian soon started sketching plans for a gym that combined parkour with the show's off-the-wall obstacles. He found the perfect location—a former basketball court inside the Danvers Indoor Sports facility—and then found the perfect instructor in the high-energy Klapper, who seems to have landed his dream job. Just like Mom said he would.



The response from my co-workers was far less encouraging when I announced that I was going to be a ninja for a day. The word "weak" may have been thrown around, and one of them said outright: "No offense, Matt, but I don't think you can't do this."

Challenge accepted.

As soon as I enter the gym, I see it: the 15 1/2-foot warped wall, towering over all the other obstacles. But I'm nowhere near ready to tackle it yet. First comes some stretching and a lesson from Klapper on how to land—a key skill if you don't want to leave on a stretcher. I practice jumping and landing like a frog, squatting down with my weight on my toes. Then I jump off some blocks and successfully stick the landing. I'm all toes! Visions of Kerri Strug dance in my head. Only I'm not injured. Not yet anyway.

THE SWINGING ROPES

To start, I'm faced with the smallest of the three warped walls. Klapper demonstrates—running, jumping, grabbing the top of the wall and pulling himself over—while Afsharian chimes in with the advice they give the kid climbers: Mimic Super Mario. I was never any good at video games, and it shows. With each attempt I progress a little farther, but I keep stalling out while trying to pull my body up to the top of the wall. This is the stunt that even the kids who work out at Gymja Warrior can do—what hope do I have for rest of the course if I can't even get up the first damn wall?

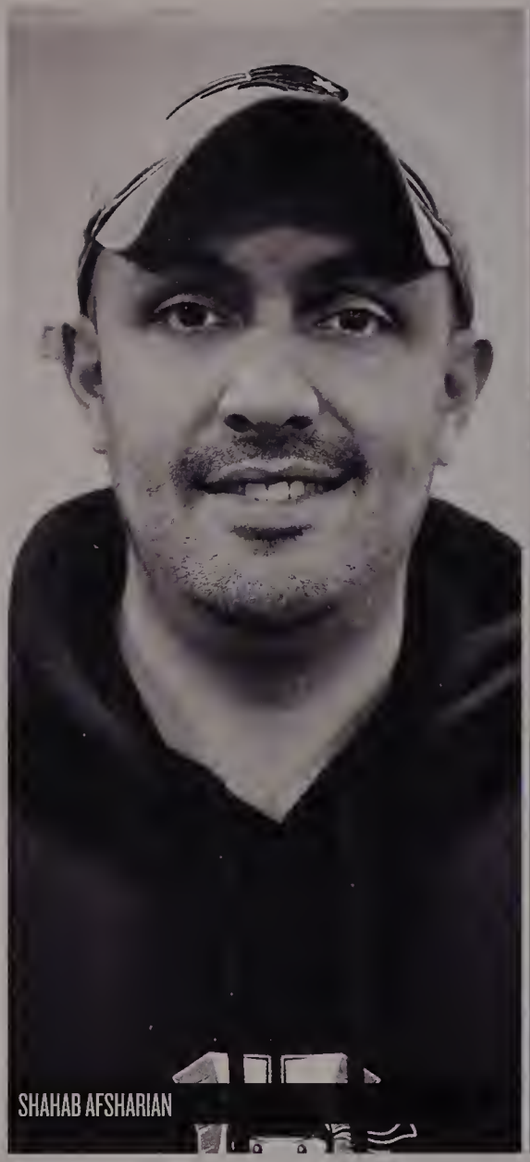
Finally, after some more tips from Klapper, I make it to the top. But I resist the urge to raise my arms in triumph—I know the ropes are next. Afsharian tells me about one visitor who hit the gym for an open workout for parkour enthusiasts and former American Ninja contestants. He made it from a sitting position to the top of the 25-foot rope in 4 seconds flat. The ropes, however, are Klapper's white whale. When he was on American Ninja, he was eliminated on them. "It was 3:30 am in St. Louis, and it was near freezing," he recalls. "All I remember is losing my grip, and when I hit the water below, it felt almost like I was breaking through a bit of ice it was so cold."

Needless to say, I pass on attempting the stunt of jumping from one rope to another. Instead, Klapper has me use the rope to jump off a stack of mats, trying to vault myself over a blue mat and safely onto a yellow one. I decide this could be one of the easier stunts. First jump, blue mat. Failure. Second jump, blue mat. Third jump, blue mat—but just barely. Finally, I swing back and let the rope take me safely to the yellow mat. Another success. This must be the course they use for the 10-year-olds' birthday parties.

I move to the running steps, usually the starting stunt on the show. The goal is to make it from one side to the other without touching the ground, leaping from one slanted step to the next. With my extensive experience jumping puddles while running to catch the No. 9 bus, this seems up my alley. Klapper teaches me three ways to jump and land, and after a few attempts, I make it to the other side. I run it again in an attempt to raise my confidence, but I fail. I try again—and fail. Perhaps it's best not to press my (beginner's) luck.

"The baseline for doing rings and bars is three pull-ups," Klapper says as we move to the rings.

Uh-oh. Pull-ups had always been a problem for me during those grade-school fitness tests. I just never had much upper-body strength as a 10-year-old kid. My guess is more than 20 years of doing nothing to address that issue hasn't improved matters.



A pull-up is attempted. A pull-up is not completed. I'm still allowed to climb the diagonal bars, and Klapper adjusts one bar so I can push my feet off it and gain enough leverage to move up the bars. Up and down the bars I go. My confidence is bubbling over at this point, and that's clearly an experience Afsharian wants to cultivate in all his customers, be they little kids, teens or adults. There's a sign by the door listing gym mottos such as staying positive, solving problems and showing respect, and Klapper tailors each stunt to the customer's ability.

Alas, in my case the confidence begins to fade as I move to the rings. No problem-solving prowess can help me mimic Klapper, who swings swiftly from one ring to the other. I grab onto one of the rings and just hang there, like the forgotten Christmas ornament you see dangling from a tree left on the curb after New Year's. Rings are not for me.

"IF SOMEONE TELLS YOU THAT YOU CAN'T DO SOMETHING, PROVE THAT YOU CAN."

Also not for me? The dreaded double salmon ladder—which tasks you with lifting a bar up a series of progressively higher pegs, while you dangle from the bar. I take one look and decide to forgo it. All that's left is the warped wall. There are two versions before me. The 15 1/2-foot giant is even bigger than the 14-foot wall on the show, and when the Gymja guys held an open house in early January, they drew takers who drove from as far as 5 hours away just to try to scale it. One guy made it up on his first try, a feat that still had Klapper raving a week later. It usually takes him a couple of tries before he can "conquer the wall."

The other warped wall is 11 feet high. It's used for kids and some adults. If you're younger than 12 and you make it to the top, you can sign your name on it. This wall seems perfect for me. Or at least, more realistic than the 15 1/2-footer.

SHAHAB AFSHARIAN

VINCE KLAPPER

Afsharian attempts to calms my nerves, telling me that a lot of people actually find this easier than the smaller, more curved wall I previously conquered. Once again, Klapper goes through the run, reaching the top and using the stairs to get down. If only I could use the stairs to get to the top.

I make a couple of runs up the wall, but I can't even touch above 9 feet. Afsharian reminds me to reach up and backward to account for the curve. I focus in, sorting through all the tips, determined to reach the top. I make a run for it. One step, two steps, three and I reach, grabbing the top of the wall with my hand. Victory! But then... I can't hold on. I come crashing down, banging my knee, leg and ankle on the padded ground. Klapper had taught me to slide down the wall, but in the moment, the lesson was forgotten. I gingerly get up. Later that night I discover that my fibula is fractured, but at that moment it's my pride that's most banged up.

As I sit nursing my wound on the sideline, the photographer tries to scale the smaller warped wall I'd climbed at the start of the lesson. "Don't tell me he can do it without breaking a sweat," I think to myself. With every unbroken bone in my body, I silently root for him to fail. He does. My pride is making a comeback.

Just then, Afsharian pulls out his phone to show me video of an 8-year-old kid climbing the 11-foot wall that had done me in. He reached the top. "That was his fourth time up the wall after his mother had told him he couldn't do it," Afsharian says.

"The thing that made me happy was his mom said, 'You're too small, you can't do that,'" Klapper adds. "Then he did it. I was like, 'Yeah, buddy, good.' Prove yourself. If someone tells you that you can't do something, prove that you can."

My co-worker's jeers—ahem, concerns—echo in my head. Had I failed in my mission to prove that I was indeed an alpha male (in an office predominantly populated by women)? Had my inability to scale a wall like Spider-Man brought shame to my clan? Nah. Just for having attempted it, I was walking pretty tall—broken leg and all. ◆

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

SHORE THING Most '90s kids probably remember Pauly Shore best from his turns in flicks like Bio-Dome and Son in Law, where he played characters that were part class clown, part annoying stoner you wanted to punch in the face. Love him or hate him, you have to concede that the guy doesn't mind poking fun at himself for a laugh. He went on to appear on HBO's Entourage in a recurring cameo as a snarling, washed-up comic who hated Johnny Drama. And that same penchant for smirking self-abasement is evident in his recent self-directed documentary, Pauly Shore Stands Alone, an unflinching look at his evolution from self-described "rock star" to hard-working, midlevel standup. Get a taste of the latter on Jan. 30 at the Wilbur Theatre. / Alexandra Cavallo

NO MAN'S LAND Don't let the title fool you: There's not a single male aetor in The Duke of Burgundy. Set in an uncertain time and plaee, this dreamy drama from director Peter Strickland follows amateur lepidopterist Cynthia and her submissive maid, Evelyn—but all is not as it seems, as Evelyn is revealed to be the mastermind behind each of the couple's carefully orchestrated S&M scenarios. Long-term relationships, however, rarely stick to a seript, and Evelyn's desire for punishment leaves Cynthia yearning for something more conventional. (Read: more butterflies, fewer ropes.) Cateh a look at kinky love that's far more artful than Fifty Shades when the Brattle Theatre sereens the film on Jan. 30-Feb. 5. / Meaghan Leahy

American Sniper ★★★ We've grown used to Bradley Cooper as a comic performer, but director Clint Eastwood recognized something deeper. We first view Cooper's Chris Kyle as he's staring down the scope of his sniper rifle at his target: an Iraqi boy holding a grenade. As Chris trains his sights on this young killer, who can't be more than 7 or 8 years old, Eastwood cuts to Chris as a child in Texas, shooting a deer during an inaugural hunt with his dad. "That was one hell of a shot," Wayne Kyle (Ben Reed) tells his son. "You got a gift." That gift leads Chris to become a Navy SEAL. Called for service on the day he weds Taya (Sienna Miller, strong in an underwritten, weepy role), he heads for a solitary honeymoon in Iraq, where his bullet will rip through that grenade-wielding child's chest. This will stand as the first of an unmatched 160 confirmed kills across four tours of duty, earning Chris the nickname "The Legend," as Cooper subtly projects the effects of PTSD. While the adaptation of Kyle's autobiography has taken heat as an endorsement of 'Merica's war machine, this is Eastwood at his most apolitical, no matter what chair he prefers talking to. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, West Newton and Assembly Row.)

Birdman or (The Unexpected Virtue of Ignorance) ★★★ There's a gimmick in this new tour de force from Alejandro González Iñárritu, but it's not what you're thinking. Sure, Michael Keaton is terrifically ironic as Riggan Thomson—aka Birdman, a nod to his time as Batman more than two decades ago—a washed-up actor attempting a "serious" comeback on Broadway by writing, directing and starring in an ill-advised adaptation of Raymond Carver stories. No, it's the single-take illusion that Iñárritu and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki employ when it serves little dramatic purpose, especially given the amount of time compression (the movie is set during the course of about a week). Lubezki won an Oscar for the same trick in Alfonso Cuaron's Gravity, and initially it seems to fit the backstage feel, as if we're watching a play within a play—but moving outside the theater, the technique is a scream for attention. That's a shame, given the nice work by Edward Norton as the stage star who tries to overtake Riggan's production, an understated Zach Galifianakis as Riggan's friend and producer, and Emma Stone out-acting everyone as Riggan's assistant. She's also the possibly schizophrenic actor's recovering addict daughter, who falls for her father's nemesis. Yeah, the script's the weakest part. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Blackhat ★★ Michael Mann, the talented auteur behind 1995's Heat, can still stage a street-level shootout like nobody's business—they come at the 60- and 90-minute marks in this otherwise inert 133-minute film—but there's really not much need for automatic gunfire in a film about computer hackers tracking another hacker, is there? Chris Hemsworth (aka Thor) plays Nick Hathaway, the world's hunkiest hacker—just one goofy thing in Morgan Davis Foehl's silly screenplay. Nick's been doing time after hacking into a couple of banks, but when Chen Dawai (Leehom Wang), his former MIT roommate and a current Chinese government agent, requires help after a hacker melts down a nuclear reactor in China, Nick receives a get-out-of-jail-free card, plus a new girlfriend in the shapely form of Chen's sister (Wei Tang). Mann must've thought we'd be too distracted reading subtitles to notice that none of the Chinese dialogue syncs with the actors' mouths. Then again, none of the dialogue syncs with the hackneyed hacking plot, either. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Foxcatcher ★★1/2 In this true-crime drama, Steve Carell is nearly unrecognizable as billionaire John du Pont, outfitted with a prominent prosthetic nose. Channing Tatum also sports a fake proboscis, and cauliflower ears, as 1984 Olympic gold medal-winning wrestler Mark Schultz. The makeup is an unconvincing distraction, a miscalculation by Bennett Miller, the talented director of Capote, who'd resisted burying Philip Seymour Hoffman under latex. It's unfortunate, given the strong work of his leads. Carell is deliberately creepy and off-putting, adopting a lilting monotone that's as vacant as du Pont's eyes. Tatum seethes with silent rage in the shadow of his older, more successful Olympian brother Dave (a bearded Mark Ruffalo), a family man and gym owner who's happy to hear that du Pont is making the underemployed Mark a coach at du Pont's Foxcatcher Farm, a massive estate in suburban Philadelphia. But du Pont eventually becomes disappointed in Mark and offers Dave a coaching position, setting the stage for tragedy. The film is set during the buildup to the 1988 Olympics, but the shooting that's shoehorned into the final 10 minutes didn't actually transpire until 1996, making the supposition of what may have fueled the climactic crime feel as false as the nose on Carell's face. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

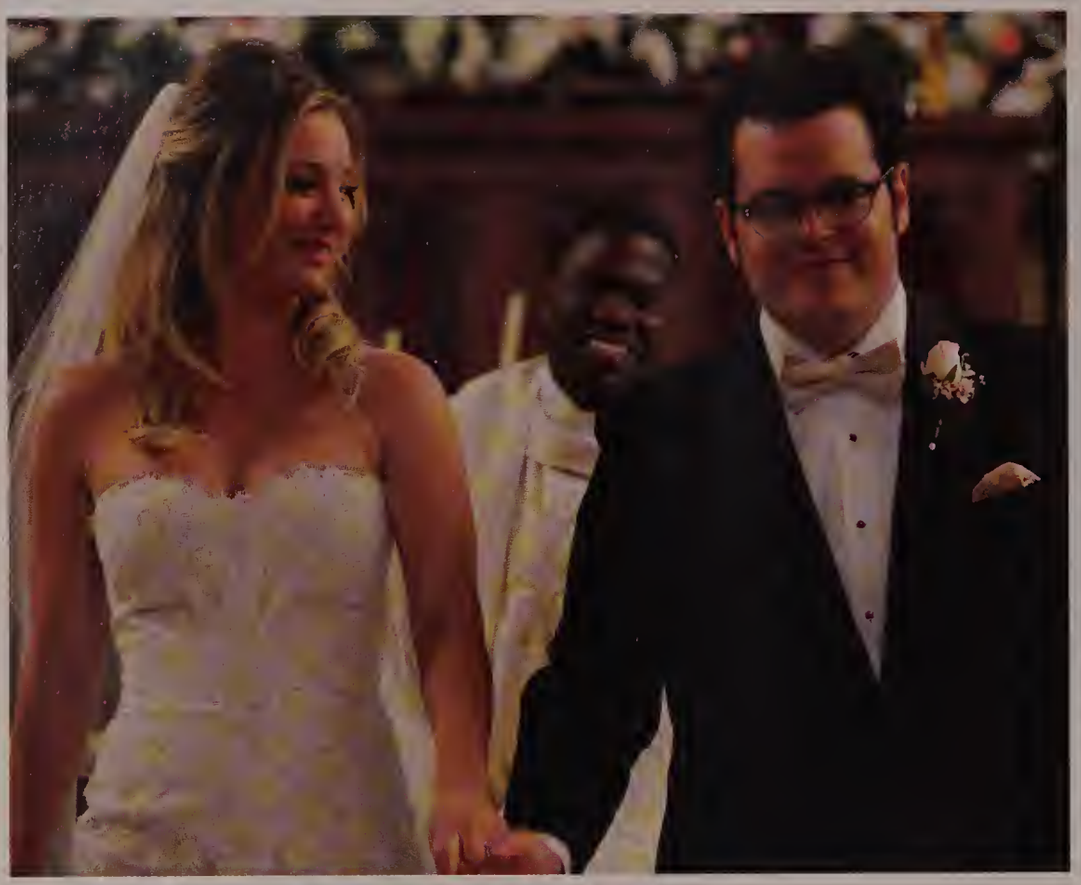
The Imitation Game ★★★ Director Morten Tyldum spends so much time setting up complex puzzles that he oversimplifies the life of his central enigma: Alan Turing, a British genius posthumously regarded as a father of the modern computer. Fortunately, Benedict Cumberbatch expertly plays the tortured intellect, who was enlisted to join "half a dozen crossword enthusiasts in a small village in the south of London" racing to crack the supposedly unbreakable Nazi codes of Germany's Enigma machine during World War II. It's Turing's hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle constructed by screenwriter Graham Moore, working from a biography that revealed more about the real Turing, including how he was fascinated by the scene in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs where the evil queen dips an apple into poison. Turing was sentenced for indecency in '52, and onscreen text informs us of his tragic suicide at the age of 41, a year after beginning government-mandated "chemical castration." It's a very conventional ending to a film about a complex, puzzling life. What we don't see is that Turing died of cyanide poisoning—a half-eaten apple beside him, foam coating his mouth, no prince to save him. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Inherent Vice ★★★★ The first adaptation of a Thomas Pynchon novel, director Paul Thomas Anderson's latest opens on a shot of Gordita Beach in 1970. The location is fictional, but the time period isn't: Anderson and cinematographer Robert Elswit have managed to recreate Los Angeles, gloriously captured on 35mm film as though they shot it in 1970. The ocean is viewed from a bungalow belonging to Larry "Doc" Sportello (Joaquin Phoenix), a lovelorn private dick and "dirty, filthy hippy" who mumbles his way through cases not unlike Elliot Gould's Philip Marlowe did in Robert Altman's The Long Goodbye. Doc is introduced to us by the mysterious Sortilège (singer Joanna Newsom), who appears bathed in sunlight and narrates the film, guiding us toward our first view of Shasta Fay Hepworth (Katherine Waterston), Anderson's version of a femme fatale. Jonny Greenwood's music lends a somber tone, a mood Anderson sustains throughout the meandering mystery—when he isn't making you laugh with absurdist delight. Josh Brolin is a standout as buzz-cut Christian "Bigfoot" Bjornsen, a lieutenant detective who spends his days enacting "civil rights violations." I remain blissfully unaware as to whether most of Sortilège's appearances occur anywhere other than in Doc's drug-addled mind; her tendency to disappear mid-conversation from the passenger seat of Doc's moving vehicle might leave literal-minded viewers thinking the movie more Incoherent Vice than the scruffy masterpiece it is. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Into the Woods ★★1/2 Rob Marshall returns to the movie musical after five years, and although this adaptation of Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine's 1986 stage production avoids becoming the debacle that was Nine, he's still blocking the action as poorly as he did more than a decade ago with Chicago. But then, that film won six Oscars, including Best Picture, so someone likes what he's doing. And frankly, his latest is well-cast, with Meryl Streep headlining as the Witch and Johnny Depp as the Wolf in this mélange of Brothers Grimm fairy tales built around the characters of a baker (James Corden) and his barren wife (Emily Blunt). Streep's blue-haired sorceress bursts into their shop, offering to grant the couple a baby, if only they'll retrieve items belonging to Cinderella (Anna Kendrick), Little Red Riding Hood (Lilla Crawford), Rapunzel (Mackenzie Mauzy) and Jack (Daniel Huttlestone), he of the Beanstalk. Most of the dialogue is sung; if that isn't your thing, you'll be missing Chris Pine's dazzlingly hammy turn as Prince Charming, where he unleashes his inner Shatner in a way barely glimpsed in his Captain Kirk role during two Star Trek pictures. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

A Most Violent Year ★★★1/2 It's difficult to watch writer/director J.C. Chandor's third impressive movie (after Margin Call and All Is Lost) without recalling The Godfather, although the violence isn't as overt as it was in Francis Ford Coppola's films, despite the threat established with Chandor's choice of title. A Most Violent Year also takes place in and around New York, but it's set during a different era than Coppola's mob masterpieces. Specifically, the winter of 1981—one of the city's most crime-ridden years. Oscar Isaac plays Abel Morales, an upwardly mobile immigrant who's trying to build a good life for his wife, Anna (Jessica Chastain), and their daughters by running a legitimate heating oil company in a corrupt industry. Chandor spends as much time focusing on the Morales' marriage as he does on Abel's troubled business dealings. Anna's father was a small-time hood, and as much as she's pressuring her biblically named husband to become a big-time one, he holds to his metaphorical guns—even as she resorts to packing a real one, creating more tension in a film rife with it. Isaac and Chastain are superb, as is Albert Brooks as Abel's lawyer. This is not to be missed. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)



Selma ★★★ Ava DuVernay's film shares much in common with Steven Spielberg's Lincoln; both focus on the back-room political deals and maneuvering of their protagonists, as well as on these men's rallying public personas. But there's a very good reason her movie isn't called King: It's a historical chronicle about a movement, set during a riotous three-month period in 1965, when the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. led a peaceful campaign against violent opposition that culminated in an epic march in Alabama from Selma to Montgomery and coincided with President Lyndon B. Johnson's signing of the Voting Rights Act. DuVernay's intimate dramatization of the civil rights movement is enlivened by the remarkable central performance of David Oyelowo as King. The British actor brings the same humanity and frustration to his role that Daniel Day-Lewis brought to the embattled president in Lincoln, with just as much humor. Shame that fellow Brits Tom Wilkinson (as Johnson) and Tim Roth (as George Wallace) feel so utterly out of place in their roles. Nevertheless, DuVernay's achievement is a reminder of the road we still need to travel. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Taken 3 ★ Don't be taken by this cynical cash grab that trades on Liam Neeson's good name. Even he looks bored in his third time playing ex-covert operative Bryan Mills, a man whose "particular set of skills" find him trying to escape a plot that's a rehash of The Fugitive. Screenwriters Luc Besson and Robert Mark Kamen's brazen theft wouldn't be complete unless they had Bryan, framed for the murder of his ex-wife (Famke Janssen), escaping into the sewers with a dogged detective, Franck Dotzler (Forest Whitaker), hot on his trail. And lest you think Dotzler is the oddest-named person in this joyless exercise in PG-13 inaction, this hopefully final installment of the franchise that launched Neeson as a formidable action star at age 56 is once again directed by Olivier Megaton. The Frenchman (nee Olivier Fontana), a former graffiti artist, took his name from his birthday—the 20th anniversary of the A-bombing of Hiroshima—a choice that's about as culturally sensitive as this series and its potpourri of foreign terrorists taking aim at Bryan's family. Speaking of, 31-year-old Maggie Grace returns as Bryan's college-age daughter. That takes a special set of skills, too. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Theory of Everything ★★★1/2 There's more to Stephen Hawking than the 80-minute look you may have glimpsed during A Brief History of Time, Errol Morris' extraordinary 1991 nonfiction film about the life and work of the renowned theoretical physicist. Here, director James Marsh views Hawking from the perspective of his first wife, Jane, adapting her memoir into a touching biography. As Jane, Felicity Jones displays tremendous chemistry with the superb Eddie Redmayne, who does almost as much with limited mobility as Daniel Day-Lewis in his Oscar-winning turn in My Left Foot. When we first see him as a 21-year-old Cambridge student, Redmayne's Hawking shows subtle hints of his not-yet-diagnosed motor neuron disease, but when his legs eventually buckle beneath him, his head hitting the pavement with a sickening crack, the only one to disregard his doctor's assertion that he has two years to live is Jane, then a medieval studies major and a devout member of the Church of England. Stephen lacks faith in "celestial dictators," but the two navigate their different belief systems together for a quarter of a century—a love story that defines them and defies time more than just briefly. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Wedding Ringer ★1/2 In case you couldn't figure out that Doug Harris (Josh Gad) is a loser from the multiple old friends and childhood acquaintances who refuse to be his best man, his obese ass crashes through his glass office desk to remind you. Subtlety was not on the minds of co-writers Jay Lavender and Jeremy Garelick, who does double-duty as director. With less than two weeks until he marries the supposed girl of his dreams (Kaley Cuoco-Sweeting), Doug is introduced to Jimmy Callahan (Kevin Hart), owner and CEO of Best Man, Inc., a company that provides a flattering best man (i.e., Jimmy) for socially challenged men in need. Ah, but Doug requires something that's never been pulled off in the wedding ringer business: a "Golden Tux," or seven fake groomsmen (all idiots), with Jimmy pretending to be a combat-veteran priest by the name of Bic Mitchum. (That's right: Doug spontaneously came up with his best man's name while staring at items in his medicine cabinet, Keyser Söze.) That'll be $50,000, please! Or $12 at the box office—which you could spend on a funnier movie. American Sniper might have more laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Wild ★★★ Director Jean-Marc Vallée follows up last year's Dallas Buyers Club with this chronicle of a lost soul's 1,100-mile trek toward redemption and renewal, adapted from Cheryl Strayed's memoir by novelist Nick Hornby, who makes her journey as internal as it is outdoorsy. Reese Witherspoon

plays Strayed as a woman in way over her head as she sets off alone on the Pacific Crest Trail with way too much gear, little of it practical. When first we see her, Strayed's well into her hike, tearing off a toenail bloodied from boots that are too small. But the real suffering came before. We flash back through various episodes of her life, from dealing with an abusive father in her troubled childhood (where she's played by Bobbi Strayed Lindstrom, the real Strayed's daughter) to the better upbringing she escaped to with her mother, Bobbi (a terrific Laura Dern), before things became worse again. This isn't the America's Sweetheart persona you expect from Witherspoon. Whoring herself out for heroin in flashback and frantically licking dew off of her tent to survive in the wild, she gives one of her most stripped-down performances to date. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SOUL BROTHER Nick Hakim functions a lot better on zero sleep than we do. The singer-songwriter penned most of the songs on his debut EP, Where Will We Go Pt. 1, in the early mornings after sleepless nights, returning to his recordings later to see what surfaced during those coffee-fueled wee hours. The results tackle the tough stuff, from religion to tragic death, but the sound is a lot more soothing than you might expect, blending R&B, jazz, Motown and folk from his parents' native Peru and Chile. He suggests pairing his songs with the sunrise, but we bet they'll sound equally good by night on Jan. 30 when he plays the Middle East Upstairs. / Sarah Hagman

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

At the SMFA, curator Pamela Allara and a group of artists are making art, not war. Marking the centenary of World War I, Permanent War: The Age of Global Conflict tackles all that's occurred in the wake of "the war to end all wars." Faculty member Claire Beckett's photo series "Simulating Iraq" shows California deserts transformed into pseudo-Middle Eastern villages as training grounds for U.S. soldiers. Others consider today's state of never-ending conflict: Mark Tribe explores how combat video games fuel paramilitary fantasy, while Adam Harvey fashions hijabs and burqas that disguise wearers from heat-detecting drones. See conflict from the front lines through March 7. / Sarah Hagman

ELECTRIC FEEL

Nikola Tesla's legacy as one of the pioneers of electricity was dimmed by his lack of business savvy and the unparalleled marketing chops of frenemy Thomas Edison. But his commercial failings and numerous eccentricities—no to meat and sex, yes to chats with pigeons and other planets—are only part of the picture. Author Vladimir Pistalo paints in the rest with Tesla: A Portrait with Masks, his novel imagining the inner life of the Serbian-American inventor who amassed hundreds of patents and laid the foundation for our present-day wireless networks. Tune in when Pistalo heads to Brookline Booksmith on Feb. 5. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeck-Boston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Mar-row Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

EUPHEMISTICALLY SPEAKING

The Winter Ball began 70 years ago as a debutante party for Boston Brahmins, but it's since evolved into a more inclusive holiday hoedown for ragers of all ages, although the demographic does skew toward young'uns home for vacation and looking to reconnect with their prep school friends.

Held at the Park Plaza, the evening raised money for Commonwealth Shakespeare Company and self-conducted orchestra A Far Cry. It also attracted bon vivants and bright young things such as the literarily named Kyle and Greg Hemingway Dickinson, newlyweds Juan Uribe Rubio and Jill Krupp de Uribe, her equally gorgeous sister, Liz Fish, with the absurdly handsome Mike, Beacon Hillion Miguel de Braganca and the magnificent Ty Sinnett, theatrical impresario Steve Maler and his smoldering other half, Tony Liquori, the ever-delightful Eleanor Riley, ubiquitous do-gooder Camilo Gutierrez and his gorgeous bride, Gabriela Santos, the elusive Joseph Gordon Cleveland, fashionista extraordinaire Chynna Pope, handsome shutterbug Pierce Harman, North Shore nabob John Rando, the statuesque Christina Townsend, Haitian hipster Jean-Marc Nelson, the aptly named Jason McCool and one guest who said, "If that girl's dress was any shorter, it'd be a scarf."

Alex Donner and his orchestra kept things hopping on the dance floor, while the bartenders tried to keep up with the thirsty hordes and everyone compared plans for the holidays. (Not surprisingly, Palm Beach was mentioned repeatedly.)

The evening's funniest remark: When asked why he wasn't dancing, one man responded, "I only like to waltz horizontally."

RIGHT NEXT TO THE GULAG OF WAYLAND

A snowstorm couldn't stop Captain America from making it to Fenway Park for the Celebrity Hometown Team Night benefiting Christopher's Haven, a charity that provides housing for families visiting Boston for cancer treatment.

Held at the EMC Club, the event attracted Sudbury-bred Hollywood heartthrob Chris Evans, along with co-host and Red Sox manager John Farrell and his gorgeous wife, Sue, comedian Tony V and Mix master "Fast" Freddy Murphy (who emceed), Bruins legend Cam Neely, the organization's founder, Dan Olsen, America's Got Talent contender Micah Christian, Shanghai import Ben Duvall, blond bombshell Nancy Eckersley, Faneuil Hall honcho Carol Troxell, yoga goddess Mary George, financial bigwig Diana Knightly, brunette babe Sheri Rosenberg, diehard Red Sox fan Brita Meng Outzen and one woman who lamented the rise of the lumbersexual, saying, "My boyfriend's beard is so out of control that when he comes home, I can see what he ate for lunch."

In addition to the surreal scene of snow piling up on the infield, there was a Q&A and a sumptuous dinner buffet, and guests were welcome to take selfies with their favorite celebrity. The most popular seemed to be beloved Red Sox mascot Wally, who worked the crowd like a politician from Southie and prompted one man to comment, "Dude, Wally's hitting on your wife."

However, the funniest remark came from a woman who lives in the western suburbs and said, "Sudbury? I call it Sudberia." ◆

MATTERS OF THE HEART

I AM A VERY HAPPILY MARRIED LADY, BUT I still get a kick out of parsing the OkCupid profiles of friends' prospects and squinting at their screens as they swipe left, left, right on Tinder. So I love putting together our Bachelor/ette issue, which forces the Improper staff to pause from our standard editorial duties, pore over dozens of attractive nominees, debate their relative merits and then ask those left standing some personal and occasionally impertinent questions. Tough work, but somebody's got to do it.

The final subjects lead fascinating lives, from a neuroscientist turned bartender to a corporate pro who moonlights as a fashion blogger to a Broadway vet with a wicked sense of humor. (And yes, he worked on Wicked, in case you're wondering.) It's a diverse lineup with, we hope, a little something for everyone. But they all have passion to spare and are well worth getting to know—even if you're already spoken for. Elsewhere, Alexandra Cavallo chats with Isabella Rossellini about love in the animal kingdom, I check in with an artistic matchmaker and Jonathan Soroff talks to a Pulitzer-winning playwright about hate and, more importantly, unconditional love. Happy Valentine's Day.

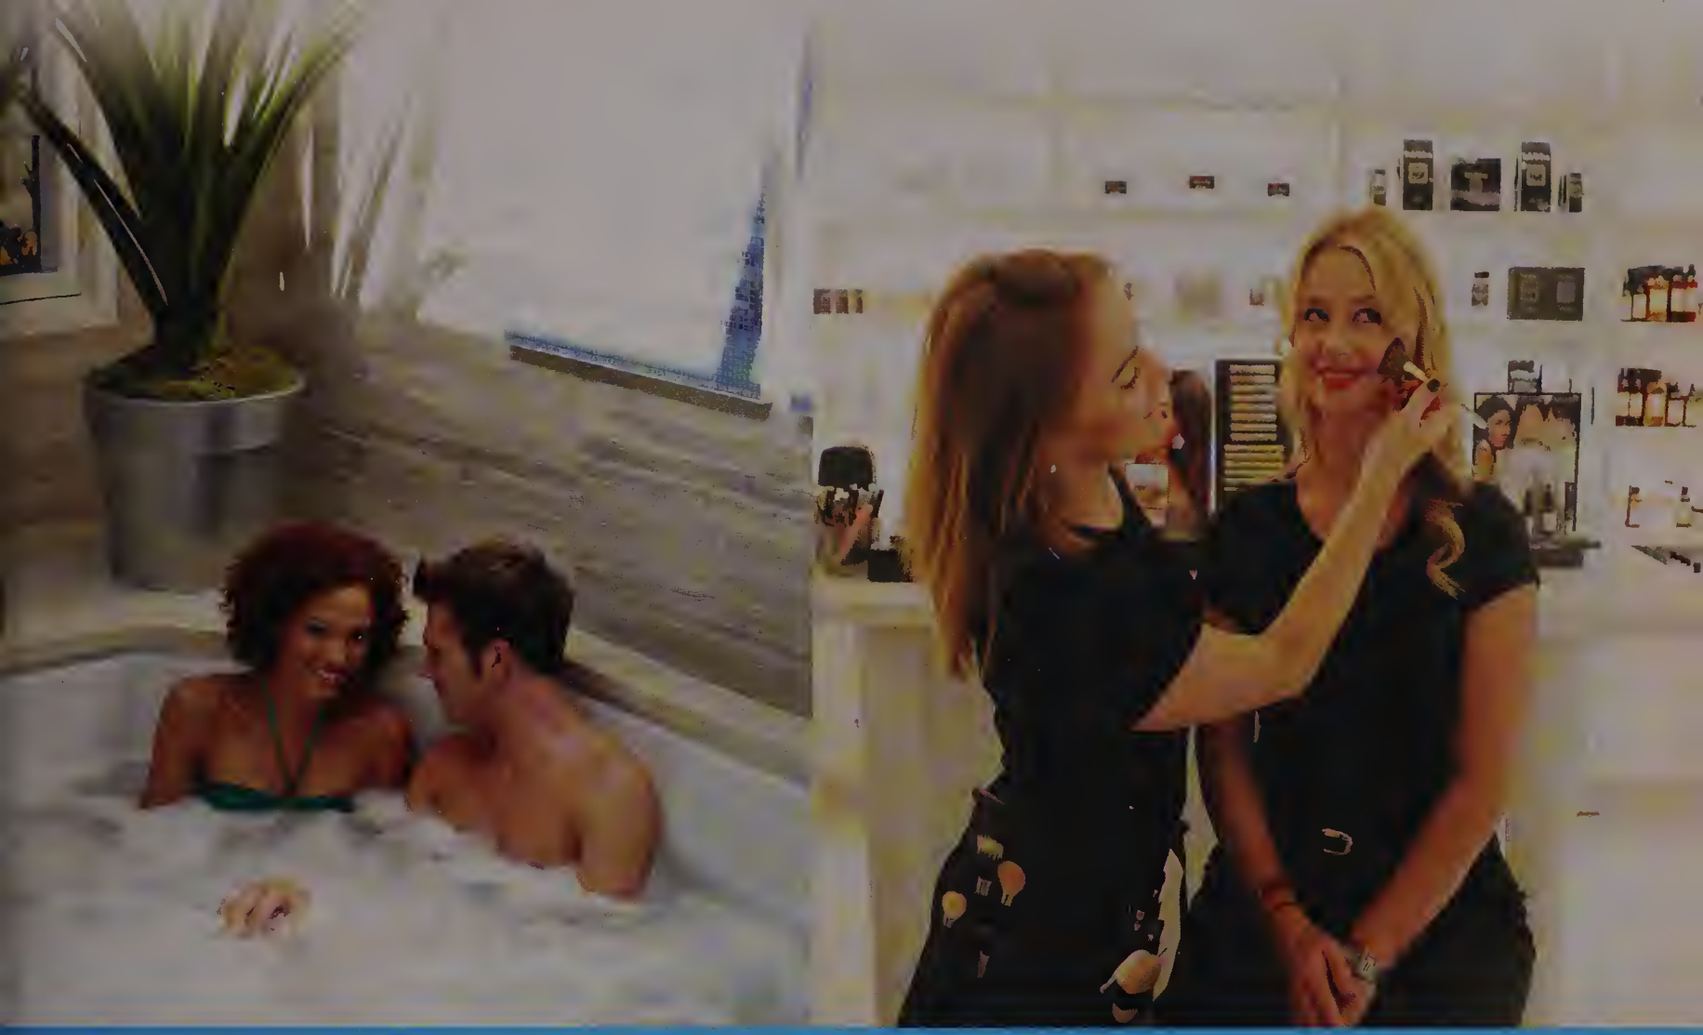
TWO TO TANGO

A FORT POINT PROJECT PAIRS UP UNLIKELY DUOS »»

PAS DE DEUX: Choreographer Courtney Peix (pictured) collaborated with artist Daniel J. van Ackere, co-creator of the Starry Night installation on A Street.

Dancing to a Different Tune



With Valentine's Day looming, Courtney Peix has been playing matchmaker—though not for hopeful singles. Instead, Peix, the founder of Contrapose Dance, has been working with Fort Point Theatre Channel co-founder Marc Miller to connect local choreographers with Fort Point artists from different disciplines who may never have set foot in a dance studio. "We tried to pair up people we thought would be interesting collaborators," Peix says of the cross-pollination project, a showcase for the 'hood's diverse art scene. "We told them there are just a few restrictions: You have between 3 and 6 minutes to choreograph, you need to collaborate with the artistic partner we paired you with, and then go! Do it. Let's see what happens."

The rest of us will get to see what happens on Feb. 13-14, when the eight resulting creations premiere in Channel/Dance, a free show at Atlantic Wharf that's the latest in FPTC's Exclamation Point! series of short new works. It's an eclectic program that promises to suit even the shortest of attention spans. "Robotic Interruptions" will have the Wondertwins (aka local dance duo Billy and Bobby McClain) interacting with Nick Thorkelson's animated androids. "Coming and Going" flips the standard choreography process, with composer Olivia Brownlee creating music to suit Audra Carabetta's moves, rather than the other way around. Other works incorporate helium balloons, giant hats and projected text; there's even a piece that will be largely developed backstage during the show's running time. And peppered between the dances will be six new plays—"palate cleansers," as Peix puts it—each less than two minutes, connected to dance in some way and selected from a pool of 80 submissions from playwrights around the world.

"I'm interested in exploring these ties and connections that humans have to one another."

But Peix isn't just helping curate the evening. She's teamed up with artist Daniel J. van Ackere, one of the talents behind Starry Night, the installation that's brought beauty to an overlooked urban nook on A Street, adorning the stretch beneath the Summer Street overpass with hundreds of blue LED lights. Hoping to evoke its effect indoors, van Ackere set out to build a platform embedded with LEDs and covered with a white canopy, creating a mini-stage that will spotlight Contrapose dancers Nina Brindamour and Maggie Foster from both above and below. "What he has ultimately done is given me a space that seems changed and unusual and singular and special," says Peix, who in turn choreographed "Dulcamara," a work that riffs on relationships. "I'm interested in exploring these ties and connections that humans have to one another, so I'm playing with movement concepts where you're folding into and out of one another, or limbs are connecting in an interesting way, and you're sort of getting tied into a knot and unfolding from that."

The only catch? Everyone has a day job, so Peix and her dancers won't actually get to work with van Ackere's creation until the day of the show. "I think of it as a challenge. There's a little bit of thrill involved in it," says Peix, who'll also have to wait until show time to see the seven other finished works. "I'm really excited to see what these pieces are going to look like. It's going to be like a giant present come the 13th of February." / Jacqueline Houton

MEI'S DAY: Moonshine 152's menu and aesthetic reflect its owner's history.

OVER THE MOON

CHEF/OWNER ASIA MEI TAKES A SHINE TO SOUTHIE.

Moonshine 152
152 Dorchester Ave., Boston
moonshine152.com

THERE'S A LOT THAT ASIA MEI LIKES ABOUT South Boston—the energy, the tight-knit families that fill the crowded residential side streets and, maybe most of all, the booming neighborhood's strong ties to its own history. "I feel like the people here really care about the direction in which they move forward." Mei says. "They're never going to forget who they were, where they came from, and the values and unique spirit that made it what it used to be."

So it's no surprise that she's drawing on her own history as she prepares to open Moonshine 152 this month, bringing a chef-owned restaurant to the Southie grid. The menu, the decor and even the location can all be traced back to Mei's past.

Taking over the former Franklin Southie spot where she worked four years ago, Mei has brought back a lot of the old crew, from bartenders to kitchen staff. But she's revamped the space. A lighter coat of paint covers the walls, and the long mirror in the back has been replaced by custom hanging gardens filled with succulents and flowers, most arranged by Mei. Another wall is dotted with molded polymer pieces that Mei crafted and painted herself to evoke the works of Dale Chihuly. Gone are the banquettes to the left of the entrance, replaced by a new partially open kitchen that will take some heat off the snug original kitchen that remains tucked away in back. Both will be turning out dishes close to Mei's heart.

"I grew up in California, and there's a lot of familiarity with Asian flavor and Latin American stuff, especially Mexican," she says. "But at the same time, we're cooking here, so it's going to be a balance."

The dirty fried rice dish on the menu improves on her mom's traditional recipe, adding spicy pickles and chopped liver to rice, scrambled egg and Chinese sausage. She'll be bringing back the Korean BBQ tacos that were popular when she worked at Franklin Southie. The dinner menu includes a mushroom tofu burger that had been on the menu at her most recent spot, Sam's. And even the quinoa salad, which will incorporate tea leaves, stretches back to her days working at Whole Foods.

But there are new items, too, like a crispy fried flounder fillet with fried pickled green tomatoes and a spicy shrimp uni sauce as well as a spicy grilled pig ear with black bean sauce, watercress and a crispy remoulade. On the brunch menu, there's a weekly changing Ron Swanson special that will be inspired by food quotes from Mei's favorite TV character. Brunch will be served on weekends and at an industry installment on Mondays. It's part of an industry focus that extends to the cocktail program, where bar manager Jesse Dupuis will oversee a Here In Spirits section in which some well-liked bartenders will have their own selections.

"I'm looking to highlight our favorite bartenders in town who aren't always in the limelight or don't have their own place yet, but who I feel like are my favorites," Mei says. "If you're not here working, which most of our favorites are, there's going to be a representation of you."

GET READY FOR RAMEN

SOUPED UP: Santouka is bringing another ramen option to Harvard Square.

PREPARE YOURSELF FOR SOME SERIOUS slurping action: Hokkaido-based Santouka opens its first standalone ramen location in New England this month. Santouka is named for Taneda Santouka, described as "the wandering Zen monk known for his creative touches to simple haiku poetry." Tucked into the former Dunkin' Donuts space at 1 Bow St., the ramen shop features a mild salt-base tonkotsu soup that's simmered for 20 hours with pork bones, dried fish and vegetables. Add a little of the pickled plum called umeboshi, and it's perfect sustenance in the middle of winter. Clearly, it hits the spot in Japan and beyond, too. Santouka began in 1988 as a nine-seat family-owned shop in Japan, but it has since expanded to a total of 53 restaurants in 10 countries.

BETTER LATE

ALDEN & HARLOW IS ALREADY PLENTY POPULAR one year after opening, but its new late-night menu can only enhance the restaurant's reputation. Customers popping by late in the evening can still order a few items from the dinner menu, including the show-stopping charred broccoli, richly appointed with ground cashews, Bianco Sardo and butternut squash hummus. But if you're craving something different, order the plump, juicy popcorn snails, trail them through a swirl of Calabrian chili oil, and then dip them into a ramekin of parsley and garlic ranch dressing. Even better is a trio of roasted cauliflower pierogi atop buttermilk crema, accented by sage and the juicy tartness of pickled cherries.

KEEPING WATCH

"THE PLACE HAS BEEN TRANSFORMED. YOU wouldn't recognize it—Chez Who?" Susan Regis quips about the forthcoming Shepard in Cambridge. The interior of the former home of Chez Henri has been revamped with a warm, hospitable vibe, says Regis, who is chef and co-owner with Rene Becker of Hi-Rise Bread Company. As for the menu, she'll only reveal that it "will include a few snacks perfect for the bar." Expect Shepard to open its doors by the end of February, Regis says.

Good Eats: Thy Kingdom Come

With Sweet Kingdom joining the stretch of eateries along Harvard Avenue, Allston continues to see its Asian cuisine selection become more specialized. The dedicated desserterie—buzzing with students and lined with colorful furniture—concentrates on serving fruity Hong Kong-style sweets such as the Mango Kingdom. The creamy soup is rich and refreshing, thanks to a coconut milk base that's brightened with grapefruit, bead-like pearl sago (a tapioca-like starch from palm stems), a scoop of mango ice cream and chunks of the namesake fresh fruit. Another novelty: It's open until 2 am. / Elizabeth Bomze

SEALED WITH A KISS

Once upon a time, before the advent of sexting and emojis, romance was alive and well. Young lovers not only expressed sentiments of love and devotion to one another, but wrote them down—in full sentences, no less. You can hear some of those sweet nothings this Valentine's Day, when the Boston Tea Party Ships & Museum presents Unconditional Love: The Letters of John & Abigail Adams, a performance that draws on the correspondence of the president and his wife of 54 years. To set the proper mood before the show, we tapped the Massachusetts Historical Society's Adams archives, handpicked a few favorite lines and translated them into the textese favored by kids these days. / Alexandra Cavallo

Unconditional Love: The Letters of John & Abigail Adams starts at 7 pm on Feb. 13–14 in Abigail's Tea Room at the Boston Tea Party Ships & Museum. 306 Congress St., Boston (617-338-1773) bostonteapartyship.com. $35; $50 per couple.

WILD THINGS

In her long and eclectic career, Isabella Rossellini has played everything from a seductress with the secret to eternal life to a worm. She took on the latter role in Green Porno, a 2008 Sundance short film series exploring animal sexual behavior through wacky props and costumes. Its cult success spawned Green Porno, Live on Stage, a one-woman show hitting the Cutler Majestic Theatre on Feb. 13–15. Before her stop in town, the actress chatted with us about the birds and the bees. / Alexandra Cavallo

HOW DO YOU GET INTO CHARACTER BEFORE A SHOW? Well, I'm not in character; I play myself. So, I just have to remember the words! [Laughs.] It's about 50 pages. And I have to do it in three languages, so I have to remember not to mix them up.

SO YOU DON'T USE A LOT OF PROPS? The show is conceived as a conference, so I just have a podium. But the podium sort of transforms itself into a little theater. I do puppet theater and then behind it there are a lot of animals and things I pull out. So it's a little more magical than just a podium. The show is illustrated with a lot of my films and a lot of images of my films. It's visually very vivacious.

IS THERE AN ANIMAL WHOSE MATING RITUALS YOU FIND PARTICULARLY RELATABLE? Well, the show doesn't really want to tell people how to better make love to their wife or husband. The intent isn't to give people tips for their personal life. [Laughs.] It's based on science, and it's a comical monologue about biology.

HOW HAS THE RECEPTION BEEN THUS FAR? We didn't think we would go to so many cities—35, 40 cities and three continents! It's really big for what it is. It started, really, as just an experiment.

IF YOU COULD BE REINCARNATED AND COME BACK AS AN ANIMAL, WHAT WOULD IT BE? I would probably come back as a dog that lives in the United States. Because all the wild animals are endangered, losing their habitats and poisoned by pollution, or they're hunted. Domestic animals, and especially a dog, where you have a garden and you can lie on the sofa—you have a wonderful life.

That's A Moray!

And you won't find it on the menu at our new Italian-inspired seafood restaurant, Legal Oysteria. But you will find Swordfish Salmoriglio, Lobster Fra Diavolo, Ligurian Fish Stew, and other delicacies. Legal Oysteria. You're going to love it.

Having a dinner date as the first date. Sitting across the table for two hours—it's so formal.... And there's really nothing that can ruin a mood more than watching your date eat something with their hands. Keep things simple.	WHAT'S THE BIGGEST MISTAKE TO AVOID ON A FIRST DATE?	Shaking hands to say hello. This isn't a business meeting! It's better to begin with a hug even if it feels a little forward, because it reminds your match that you're both there to see if chemistry exists.
I teach my clients to get to a point where you can walk up and tell them you find them (or something about them) attractive and wanted to introduce yourself. Being open and honest with your intentions is bold.	WHAT'S THE BEST WAY TO APPROACH AN ATTRACTIVE STRANGER?	Just say hi! Keep the conversation natural and incorporate your surroundings if you can. For example, if you're at a bar and they have a cool-looking cocktail, you could ask about it.
I've seen my fair share of profiles, and the first mistake I notice is the selection of photos. Most people think the photos they choose accurately show who they are, and the reality is, they don't.	WHAT'S THE MOST COMMON MISTAKE THAT ONLINE LOVE-SEEKERS MAKE?	Setting a timeline for finding love.... When you choose [a dating] subscription—one month, three months—you're naturally setting an expectation.... But having a deadline puts unnecessary pressure on yourself.

Drink of the Moment

A&W

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Scotch, Cocchi Americano, Gran Classico

ORIGINS: Scotch isn't the easiest of spirits to mix with other ingredients, but Ames Street Deli general manager Joe Cammarata was up for the challenge, riffing off the classic Old Pal recipe. "It's fun to give a single malt drinker, or even someone who hasn't tried it before, a scotch cocktail," he says.

TASTES LIKE: "A bitter cream soda Manhattan."

PAIR IT WITH: Chocolate. The pastry display is a short walk from the bar.

OFF THE CHART: The menu is organized as a grid for easy navigation. Cammarata explains, "We have these conversations with every guest: What are you in the mood for? Do you want something citrus, light, bitter? I wanted to get that conversation started on the page before we even come over to say hi. That way we can talk about what's in your drink and how your day was, not so much navigating to where you want to go." For example, under "Juniper" and "Taaaht and Tangy," you'll find Mr. Owl, a Tootsie Pop-flavored concoction with cranberry-infused bols, Cocchi, cacao and lemon.

PERK UP: Though a neighborhood cocktail bar, Ames Street also bills itself as a neighborhood coffeehouse, opening at 7 am—and it's bottoms up just four hours later. This month, check out workshops that combine its two personalities. On Feb. 16, sample Irish coffees with Grand Ten Distilling; Feb. 23 is all about espresso martinis. / Sarah Hagman

A-OK: The A&W is an accessible Scotch cocktail.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES

THE NEWTON-BASED AUTHOR OF THE RED TENT RETURNS WITH A DECADES-SPANNING SAGA.

The Boston Girl* by Anita Diamant
Published by Scribner, 336 pages, $26

ANITA DIAMANT'S FIFTH NOVEL FOLLOWS Addie, the Boston-born daughter of Jewish immigrants, who enters the world in 1900, bearing zest. The century unrolls under her feet, one of which stands in her parents' cautious, circumscribed world while the other dances toward new opportunities.

Venturing from her cramped North End tenement, the bright-eyed Addie visits a settlement house, discovering books and kindred spirits, before sneaking off to Rockport for more liberating adventure among mansions and nature. Emerging feminist aspirations are everywhere. So are outrages that would later be called oppression—unwelcome pawings and abuse from men, shame and injury from an illicit abortion, constraints on career options that slowly creak open. There are tragedies, too, from the hideous 1918 flu to the deaths of children and a relative's suicide. But Diamant's spirited storytelling bubbles with lively dialogue and characters—Addie's ever-sour mother, her introverted father, two older sisters with struggles of their own and the city of Boston itself, shown evolving till 1985.

Addie's ambitions take her from factory work to newspaper writing, where she rises above frivolous society gossip and begins to espouse causes that feel increasingly modern. And when love comes along, finally, it's with the kind-hearted Aaron, whose work against child labor makes him just her kind of guy.

FROM PAGE 143: I felt like I was skating on a pond that wasn't frozen all the way through and if anyone asked me, "How's the family?" the ice would break.

People kept saying, "Life goes on." Sometimes that sounded like a wish and sometimes it felt like an order. I wanted to scream, "Life goes on? Not for everyone, it doesn't." ◆

ICE CAPADES

WARM UP WITH WINTER SPORTS ON A GETAWAY TO LAKE MOREY RESORT.

Alpine skiing generally slays the competition when it comes to winter fun in New England, and with the lure of ski chalets, the après ski scene and our many mountains dusted with fresh powder, it's easy to see why. But in a small town in eastern Vermont, there's a resort that makes a strong case for forgoing the slopes and heading out to the ice instead—if only for a weekend.

A snowball's throw from the New Hampshire border, two-and-a-half hours from Boston, Fairlee's Lake Morey Resort boasts prime access to its namesake 600-acre lake, as well as 130 rooms and suites, 14 function rooms used for conferences and weddings in the summer months, and its own movie theater. There are also 2,500 square feet of luxury living in the works for this summer. Named for the owners' ancestor, who illustrated L. Frank Baum's The Wonderful Wizard of Oz, the Denslow Cottages are under construction right next door to the main hotel building, just feet from the lake's shoreline.

It's this proximity that makes guests feel like they have the run of the ice, especially during one winter weekend when Lake Morey transforms into Ice Sports University. While guests have access to skate and ski equipment rentals throughout the winter, "students" who book a "dorm" for this annual college-themed weekend (most recently held in late January) are able to enroll in complimentary classes taught by seasoned ice pros.

The agenda includes pond hockey and snowshoeing, but in terms of the intrigue level, curling takes the gold, drawing interest from those who have watched the Olympic competition and thought, "Wait, this is a sport?" Oh, is it a sport. Under the patient guidance of members of the Woodstock Curling Club, amateur curlers use their core strength and balance to push themselves off a block of wood, slide forward on a Teflon-soled shoe and aim a 42-pound stone. Arm and shoulder strength are tested next as teammates run alongside the stone, sweeping a broom with the ferocity of someone whose in-laws are on their way for an impromptu visit.

Lest the lower body not feel enough of a burn, guests can then strap on a pair of Nordic skates for a leisurely spin around Lake Morey's 4.5-mile skating trail, the longest of its kind in the country. Because the skates feature longer blades than their hockey brethren and heels that lift as they would on cross-country skis, skaters can complete the loop in less than half an hour if their glutes are up for it. Otherwise, it's the perfect time to catch your breath and take in the lakeside scenery of colorful houses visible through the bare trees.

Learning the finer points of ice fishing is perhaps the least labor-intensive activity of the weekend, and it welcomes those with the fortitude to stand in the middle of a frozen lake for an afternoon with cups of hot cocoa. (Drink up, you've earned it.) Once you drill a hole and drop a line, it's just a waiting game. But before there's even time to worry about how frozen water, even at 13 inches thick, can support both a fire and the fisherman's pickup truck without cracking, an orange flag rigged to one of the lines springs up into the air—there's a bite. In less than an hour, three perch are brought in and thrown in the truck as a treat for the kitchen staff, who keep comfort food, like root vegetable bisque, at the ready at the resort's lobby-adjacent Steamboat Lounge.

There's also a white-tablecloth dining room, but a quick walk across the hotel parking lot brings guests to the Skate Shack, a clubhouse that overlooks Lake Morey Resort's 18-hole golf course and doubles as a skate and Nordic ski rental facility. Its best feature is the kitchen; warm up with a cup of beef chili and the Morey panini of turkey, cheddar and cranberry sauce. And save room for dessert. The Skate Shack serves up "beaver tails": fried dough topped with Nutella, cinnamon sugar or maple butter.

Of course, if by this point you're already popping the Aleve, it may be time to support the state's maple industry from inside the resort's Waters Spa. A housemade sugar scrub treatment of honey, oats and Vermont maple syrup exfoliates tired winter skin, then soothes it with an almond oil massage. There is also access to the sauna and poolside hot tub, located next to a wall of windows with an unobstructed view of the lake, making it the perfect spot to relax for a spell, whether you're escaping the winter chill or eagerly awaiting the next cold front. ◆

NIGHT MARKET HITS SOME PAN-ASIAN HIGHS IN A HIDDEN SPACE.

NIGHT MARKET
75 Winthrop St., Cambridge (857-285-6948)
nightmkt.com

THE OLD REAL-ESTATE MANTRA ABOUT location is acutely true in the restaurant business; I often worry about worthy restaurants on side streets with scant foot traffic. Harvard Square's Night Market, a new pan-Asian place in a basement on Winthrop Street, doesn't help its cause by pretending its address is on JFK Street, nor with its abstruse squiggle of a monogram on its unilluminated exterior signs. The speakeasy affectation enjoyed a faddish moment in the craft cocktail business, but in Harvard Square, a hard-to-find restaurant risks losing frustrated would-be patrons to the plentiful nearby competition.

That would be a shame, as Night Market has lots of funky charm, starting with a comfy little bar and a cool, street-art-themed design that neatly camouflages the room's many load-bearing iron columns. Echoing its namesake's assortment of specialty food stalls, the kitchen skips through the cuisines of Taiwan, Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Thailand, Vietnam and several regions of China, with most dishes favoring tradition over fusion. A complimentary bite of lightly sweet-pickled cucumbers or green tomatoes is a welcoming opener. Very gentle prices on bar snacks make it easy to graze, as in subtly gamy grilled Xiajiang meatballs ($3 for a skewer of five) of lamb and bison, a skewer of five delectable grilled chicken hearts ($3) with a bacon/hoisin glaze and numb nuts ($1), peanuts glazed with chili and Sichuan peppercorns that deliver a slowly accumulating wallop of numbing heat. Grilled shishito peppers seem a tad underdone, but who could complain at $1.50 for five big chilies?

Skinny Filipino spring rolls ($6) filled with mild pork and shrimp are good; one only wishes there were more of them to scoop up the dish's real star, their phenomenal dip of pesto with green curry, cashew and a bracing slap of raw garlic. Chinese fish fry ($8.50) wrestles a ton of flavor from a humble snack food: canned fried dace (freshwater mud carp) with salted black beans, refried to a gorgeous, bacon-like texture and cunningly served atop Chinese greens and rice in its tin. Kimchi pancakes with crickets ($6) boast a delicate, crepe-like texture and the nutty crunch of deep-fried, well, bugs. The idea may be squirm-inducing, but it's the tastiest Fear Factor food bet you'll ever win. Pork gyoza ($7.50) won't challenge anyone's taboos; with their chewy pan-browned wrappers, they're just uncommonly well-executed. Lighter small plates include a lovely version of som tam ($9.50), a salad of shredded unripe green papaya dotted with tomatoes and long beans, deliciously embodying the canonical Mekong combination of hot, sour, salty and sweet accents. Curried cauliflower ($5.50) is nicely al dente and attractively pan-browned.

Three-cup chicken ($12.50), the Jiangxi standby of diced boneless chicken thighs sauced with rice wine, sesame oil and soy sauce, is serviceable but won't make you forswear your favorite Chinatown Taiwanese joint. The rich pork ragu atop wheat noodles of dan-dan mein ($12) makes for a hearty pileup, though diners expecting Sichuan-style numbing heat may be disappointed. That absence seems a virtue in comforting Taiwanese minced pork rice ($12), which showcases a velvety, sweet-and-salty, pork-based meat sauce redolent of star anise, shallots and soy sauce, accompanied by scallions and sliced pickled daikon and topped with a fried egg. It's the kind of homey brown-sauce dish that could restore brown sauce's good name.

Ten beers and one cider ($4-$12) include some well-considered options to pair with the food, notably Beerlao ($5), a classically Southeast Asian, light-bodied, slightly sweet rice/malt adjunct lager; Mama's Little Yella Pils ($6.50), a brisk American take on Czech pilsners from Oskar Blues Brewing; and Charlestown's own Downeast Cider House Original Blend ($6.50), slightly hazy and just dry enough. Wine drinkers may choose among three modest whites and one red by the glass, including the 2013 Li Veli Fiano ($7), a Puglian white with an appealing, citrusy minerality, and the 2009 García Carrión Antaño Rioja Reserva ($7), a typically oak- and vanilla-scented tempranillo blend. Cocktail lovers are relegated to fruity sake-spiked slushes from actual slushie machines, like one night's Pineapple Punch ($6.50). Service both at the bar and in the dining room is youthful, casually attentive and effusive about the menu.

Assuming customers can find it (hint: it's across the street from Pinocchio's), Night Market ought to fill a comfortable niche in Harvard Square, attracting a broad swath of students, food geeks, tourists and date-night couples. While it can't hope to match the specialization-driven excellence of the individual street-food vendors that compose a proper night market, it offers good-enough execution on a range of familiar dishes with some welcome oddness here and there, a few smash successes and fair prices for the neighborhood. That's a formula worth stumbling around a bit to find. ◆

Q: I HAVE NOTICEABLE RED SPIDER VEINS AND BROKEN CAPILLARIES ON MY NOSE AND CHEEKS.

A: Many of us develop broken blood vessels on our skin, especially if our skin is light in color or sensitive. The redness can be eliminated with IPL treatments.

IPL stands for Intense Pulsed Light and clears up broken capillaries. It is effective for tiny vessels that look like little streams, as well as general redness, or ruddiness, as is found with rosacea. By removing the redness, you will look healthier and younger due to a clear complexion.

It will take one to three IPL treatments to clear up the redness. Each treatment takes 30 minutes, there is no downtime afterwards, and you can see improvement immediately. If you have any brown age spots, those will be cleared up as well.

IPL can also be used on other parts of the body such as the chest, arms and hands.

TAILOR MADE

MATTHEW VAUGHN VIOLENTLY SUBVERTS THE SPY GENRE.

MATTHEW VAUGHN REINVENTED—and reinvigorated—Marvel Comics' X-Men for the big screen in 2011's X-Men: First Class, a period piece where he demonstrated a real affinity for the swinging '60s, in addition to the command of action filmmaking and editing he'd previously displayed in 2010's Kick-Ass, his violent, entertaining deconstruction of the modern superhero movie based on a comic book series written by Mark Millar. Now, Vaughn and regular collaborator Jane Goldman, his co-screenwriter on those pictures, have freely adapted another Millar comic book for Kingsman: The Secret Service. Although set in the present day, this affectionately winking, post-modern take on spy films aims squarely at the James Bond franchise, specifically the movies from the 1970s, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart.

In a 1997-set pre-credit sequence in the Middle East, a Kingsman recruit sacrifices his life, throwing himself atop a grenade that Harry missed during his inspection of an interrogation subject. Feeling responsible for the young man's death, Harry—known within his secret agency as "Galahad"—visits the widow of the deceased to deliver a posthumous medal of valor. Inscribed on the badge's back is a phone number, to be used at a time when assistance is needed most. The weeping woman is inconsolable, so Harry hands the medal to the recruit's 9-year-old son, Gary "Eggsy" Unwin (Alex Nikolov), who keeps it close well into his mid-20s (when the role is played by newcomer Taron Egerton), wearing it on a gold chain to complement his baseball cap and high-top sneakers.

As the film's title appears onscreen, super-spy Lancelot (Jack Davenport)—one of the men who witnessed Eggsy's father's sacrifice—is shockingly, sadistically (and somewhat comically) killed during the film's first big action scene, a hyper-stylized sequence of kinetic, sped-up and slowed-down violence that finds the dapper agent successfully mounting a one-man rescue operation to free Professor James Arnold (Mark Hamill) from armed captors in a snow-capped mountain villa. While enjoying a celebratory Scotch (presumably not stirred), Lancelot is cut down by Gazelle (Algerian actress/dancer Sofia Boutella), part of a longstanding tradition of lefthand (hench)men, like Bond nemeses Oddjob with his razor-tipped hat or Jaws with his steel-tipped teeth. Gazelle's weapon of choice? The deadly silver blades that replace her legs below the knees. She makes acrobatic use of them, slicing Lancelot straight down the middle.

Galahad must not only train this street tough in the art of hand-to-hand combat, but teach him how to tie a Windsor knot.

KINGSMAN: THE SECRET SERVICE* ★★★

Starring Colin Firth, Taron Egerton, Samuel L. Jackson, Sofia Boutella, Mark Strong, Sophie Cookson, Edward Holcroft, Mark Hamill, Jack Davenport, Alex Nikolov and Michael Caine. Written by Jane Goldman and Matthew Vaughn, based on the comic book The Secret Service by Mark Millar and Dave Gibbons. Directed by Matthew Vaughn. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.

Speaking of gymnastic feats, Eggsy was Olympic material before he dropped out of the Royal Marines and fell into a life of petty crime, one bred by years of abuse at the hands of his stepfather. When he's arrested one time too many, Eggsy finally phones the number on the reverse of his heroic dad's medal. He's sprung from jail by Galahad, who becomes the lad's suave, Savile Row-suited mentor, seeing some of the same potential he'd spotted in Eggsy's dad.

Heading to a pub, the two share a brief chat that ends with Galahad turning John Steed, cooly dispensing a gang of local hooligans with his ammunition-firing, bulletproof umbrella in another standout action scene. Afterward, Galahad takes the duly impressed Eggsy to the secret Kingsman headquarters, appropriately camouflaged in a tailor shop.

"Since 1849, the Kingsman Tailors have acted as an independent Secret Service, with the agents its knights," Galahad tells the Boy Who Would Be Lancelot, if he can be successfully groomed to take over the slain agent's code name. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Galahad continues, and he's not kidding—the designer suits Eggsy's outfitted with are just as bulletproof as the umbrella seen earlier, and the custom shoes with pop-out poison-laced blades (a nod to those worn in 1963's From Russia with Love) go nicely with the standard-issue remote-activated poison pens.

First though, Galahad must not only train this street tough in the art of hand-to-hand combat, but teach him how to tie a Windsor knot. In other words, he has the impossible task of turning Eggsy into a gentleman. Along the way, he introduces Eggsy to the Kingsman equivalents of Bond's M and Q: Arthur and Merlin. The latter is played by Mark Strong, a welcome regular in Vaughn's movies, while Arthur is portrayed with sufficient gravitas by Michael Caine.

Samuel L. Jackson shows up as Valentine—a lisping, Bill Gates-like billionaire—the depths of whose villainy are revealed during another well-choreographed action scene, this one taking place within a backwoods Kentucky chapel. If the hate-mongers in this congregation remind you of the Westboro Baptist Church members, it's likely by design. How else could you enjoy the excessive bloodletting and carnage to come in this warped house of worship, as Valentine test-drives his Master Plan, set to Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Free Bird."

It's an exhilaratingly over-the-top sequence that's a preview of the fireworks to come. And if you enjoy a good fireworks display, Vaughn's film ends with one of the best sight gags this critic's seen in a while—all before the filthy sex act that serves as a true climax.

If Bond's upper lip has grown too stiff for you, Eggsy's new breed of spy is bound to raise a few eyebrows. ◆ play House of Blues on Feb. 18.

Music / Paul Robicheau

FAMILY LINEAGE

BROTHERS FOLLOW IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF THEIR GENRE-BREAKING FATHER.

AFRICAN RHYTHMS AND ALT-ROCK COLLIDE in the music of Kongos, a band of brothers who spent their early years in South Africa before moving to Arizona. But the siblings' hybridized sound in the hits "I'm Only Joking" and the chart-smashing "Come with Me Now" reflects musical roots beyond geographic influence.

Three of the four brothers were born in England, where their South African father John Kongos scored 1970s hits with "Tokoloshe Man" and "He's Gonna Step on You Again," a song that Happy Mondays recycled into its 1990 single "Step On."

"He was doing similar things way before us, using African rhythms and finding this blend with rock music, so it was a direct influence," says Johnny Kongos, whose accordion greases the South African kwaito groove of "Come with Me Now." Not only did their father share a sprawling record collection (the source of the Burundi beat that inspired "I'm Only Joking"), but he provided the home studio where his sons still record. "He always encouraged us to do it yourself," Johnny says.

"There was no idea that we'd be a band,'" says the bearded keyboardist/singer, the eldest brother at age 33, followed by singer/drummer Jesse, singer/bassist Dylan and guitarist/singer Danny, the youngest at 26. "[Our parents] wanted us to learn music because they thought it would be an enriching part of our lives, even if we went on to become something else. But you start playing in a band with your brothers and, for us at least, that's as good as it gets. And to have the opportunity for a career and make money at it, that's a bonus!"

"We're very slow.... We do it all ourselves, and we have the luxury/curse of being in a studio with unlimited time."

The brothers weren't drawn only to popular styles of music. Jesse and Johnny played jazz fusion in the vein of Miles Davis' Bitches Brew at Arizona State University. And when they rounded out a rock foursome with a teenaged Danny and began work on Kongos' 2007 debut, Johnny picked up the accordion with the realization that they'd heard that sound in Pakistani Qawwali music as well as Astor Piazzolla's modern Argentinian tango. "We found this weird blend that we liked of that stuff," he says. "However, it came out through us mangled and bastardized."

Their second album, Lunatic, yields more commercial potential, from tribal anthems "Come with Me Now" (with a melodic bridge that evokes British rockers Muse) and "I'm Only Joking" to the reggae-tinged new single "I Want to Know" and the McCartney-esque ballad "Traveling On." All four members chip in songs that they write separately. "Everyone's got their own style," Johnny says, "that then gets somehow mashed into Kongos."

But that bonus of making money took a long time to kick in, especially in Kongos' adopted homeland. The Phoenix band released Lunatic in South Africa in 2011 after songs began to take off there, but there was "a year-and-a-half lull where nothing was happening stateside," Johnny says. A Denver radio station finally jumpstarted "Come with Me Now" in 2013. Kongos self-released Lunatic in the U.S. that fall, spurring a major-label reissue in early 2014. Now the quartet finds itself performing to fresh audiences—from a tour supporting Kings of Leon to a Feb. 18 headlining date at House of Blues—with songs nearly five years old.

"It's still exciting every night to go out and get a reaction," Johnny says from a Texas tour stop. Success in South Africa prepared Kongos for its break in America, while Lunatic's slow gestation gave members extra time to write new songs that they'll record later this year, he says. "We're very slow at recording. We do it all ourselves, and we have the luxury/curse of being in a studio with unlimited time."

From their father, once again, the brothers learned that both hard work and patience pay off in the music business. "He also realized, from his own career, that sometimes all it took was a song, because it was that for him also," Johnny says. "It's interesting that as much as things have changed with the Internet and Spotify and piracy and all that, a song still has a lot of power to get things going." ◆

FINANCIAL ILLITERACY

IF THERE'S ANYTHING DRIER THAN ECONOMICS, IT'S A BOOK ABOUT ECONOMICS.

I ENJOY BOOKS, BOTH FOR THEIR OWN SAKE and because I am pretentious. If somebody asks what I'm reading, I like to have an answer that implies intellectual ambition, an insatiable hunger for knowledge. But I also want to stay current on my pop culture, so the ideal book will be both snooty and popular. And during the past year, the intersection of Snooty and Popular belonged to Thomas Piketty's Capital in the Twenty-First Century.

If you're not familiar with Piketty, he's a French economist. And probably now a rich one, too, since his book became the most unlikely of bestsellers. In my case, I was browsing a bookstore with a friend of mine when he said, "Oh, you should get that. It's good." And, not wanting to seem like the Us Weekly-reading dum-dum that I really am, I said, "Sure! I'm always keen to learn the latest French economic theory!" Most copies of this book, I think, were sold under similar circumstances, akin to a dare.

By the time I jumped on the Piketty bandwagon, the book was already popular, so I trusted in the wisdom of the crowd. Sure, it's a 650-page economics treatise, but maybe he makes it fun, like Michael Lewis would. Will the rentiers be able to maintain their aristocratic lifestyles after the transition from an agrarian economy? Grab some popcorn and let's find out!

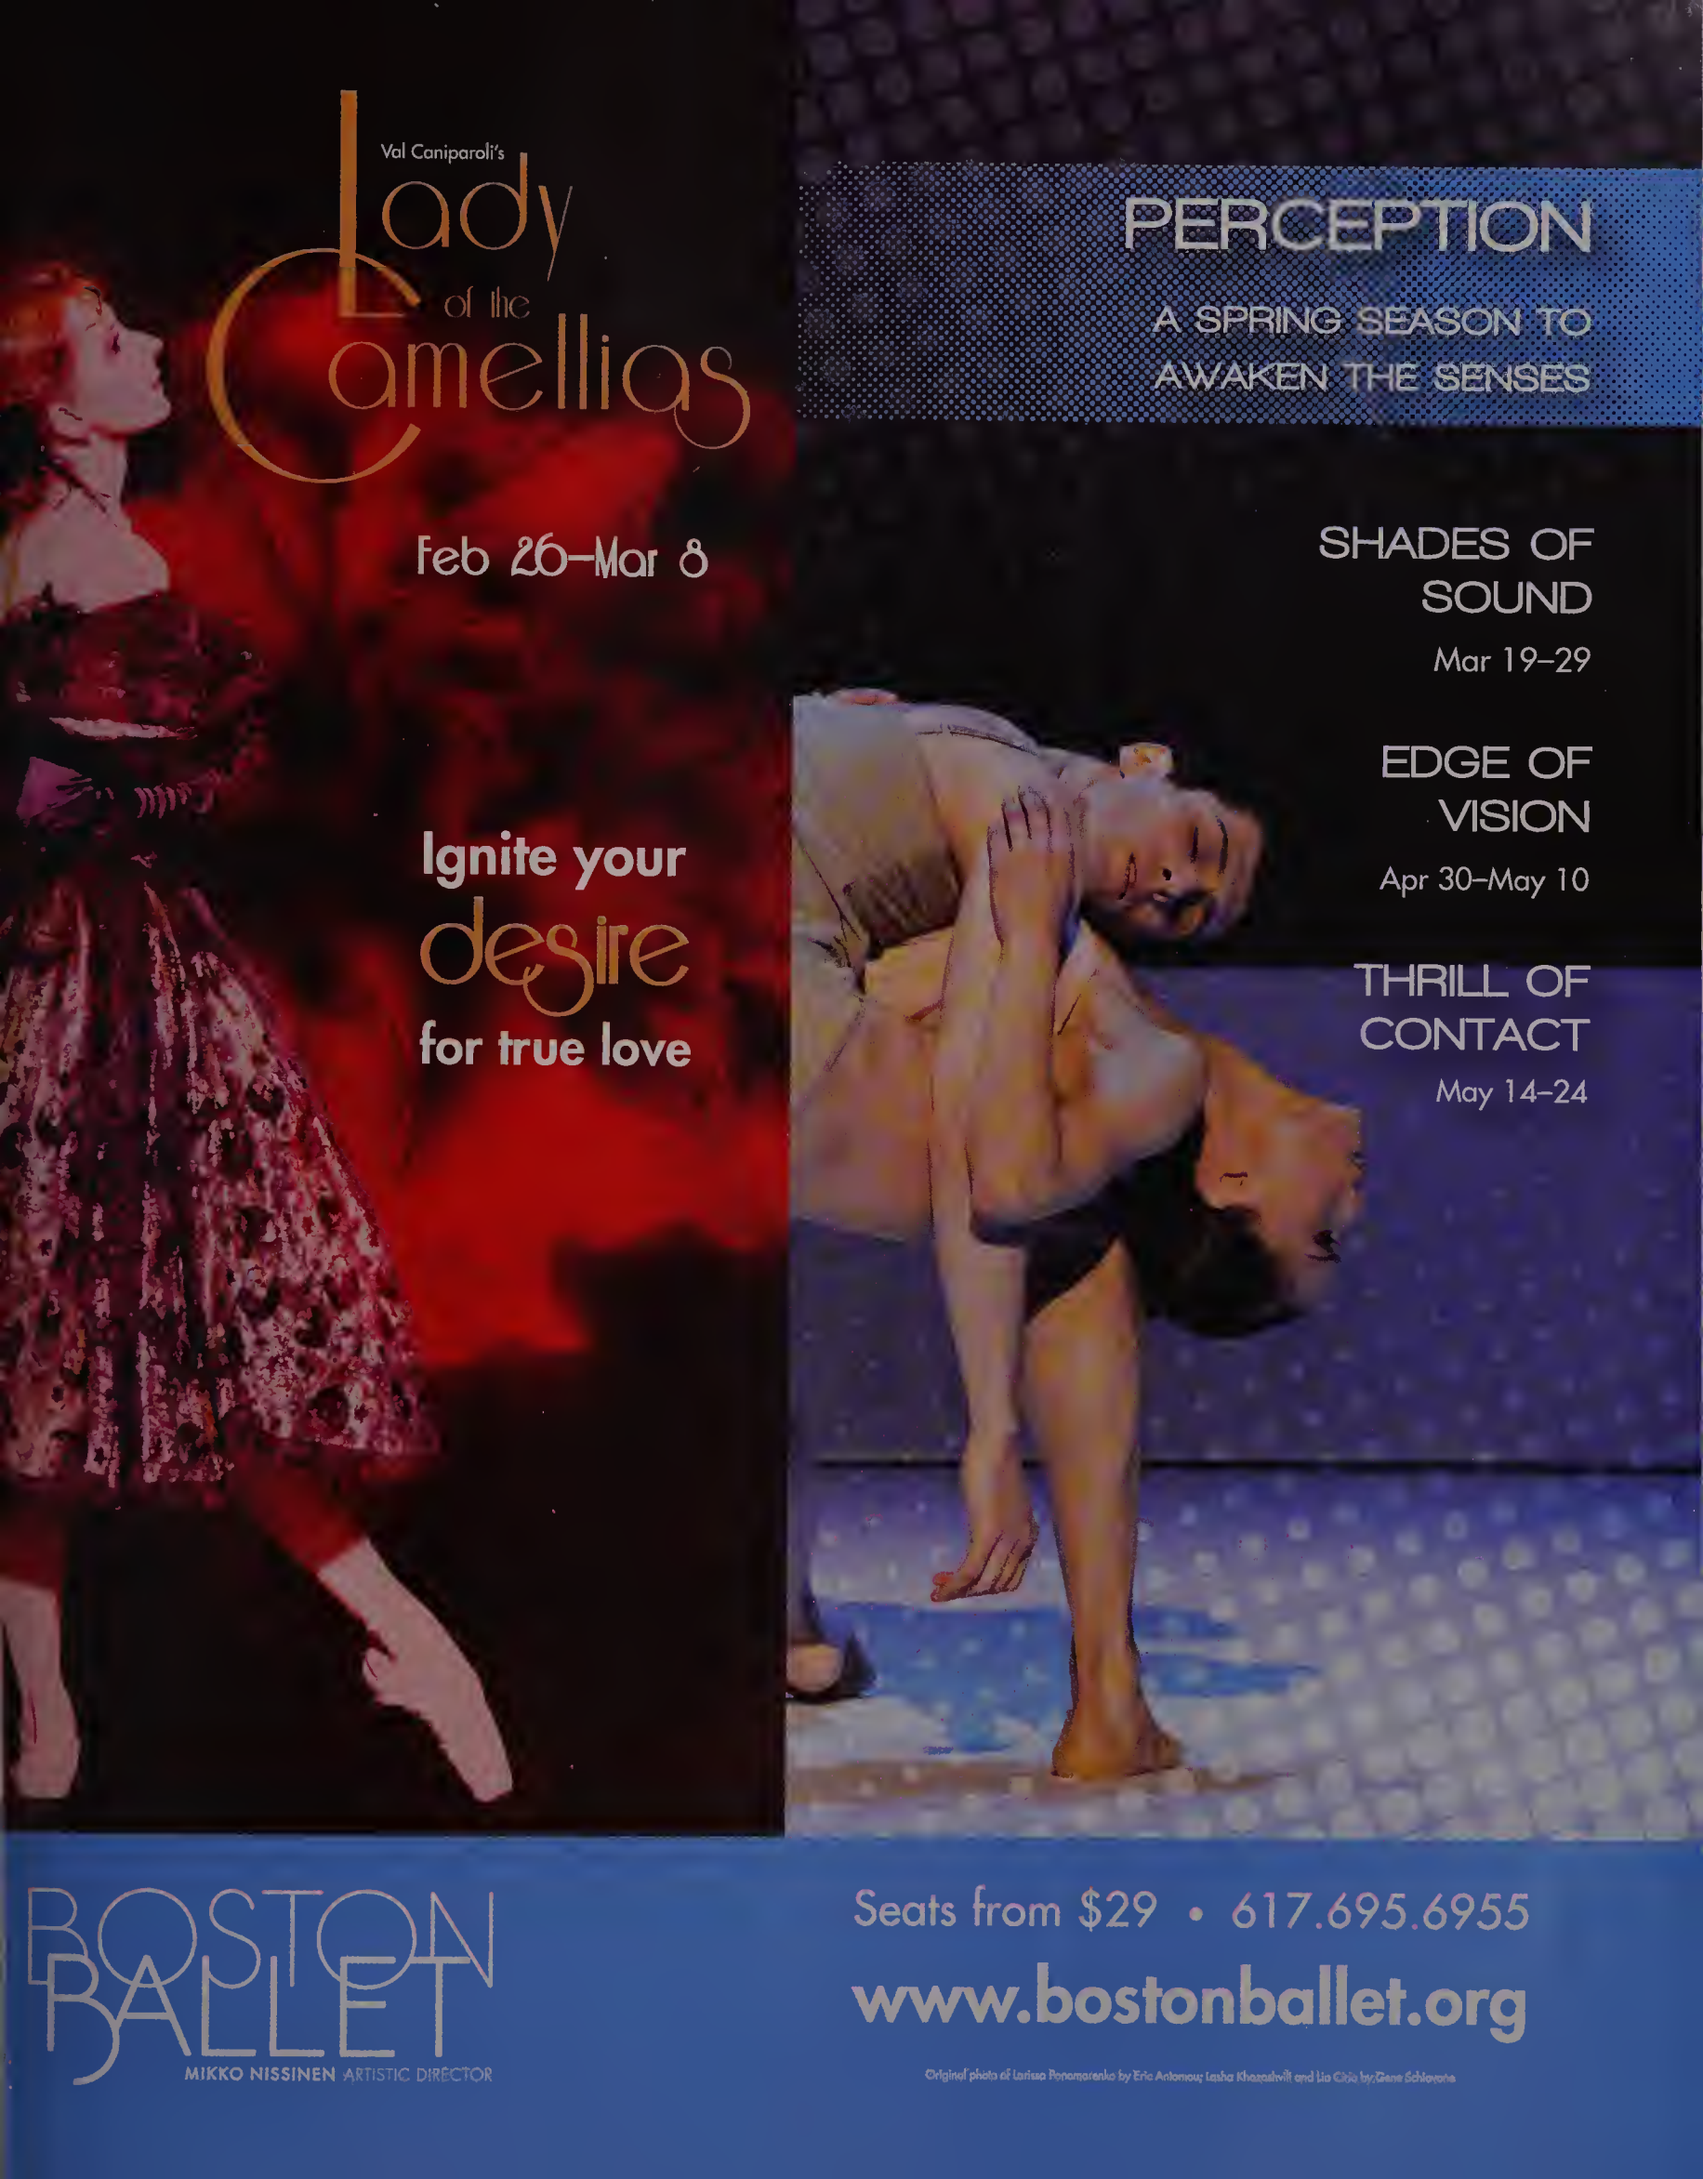
Let me save you a lot of time and get right to the points that are interesting, inasmuch as there are any. Did you know that a long time ago, there was no inflation? In the 1800s, British novelists commonly mentioned characters' incomes as shorthand for their social standing. They could do so because 100 imperial dingledoons one year would be worth the same amount 30 years later. But financing the World Wars led to inflation, and authors had to stop mentioning people's incomes because doing so would make their books seem prematurely dated. Nowadays, a lot of people don't like inflation, but it's important to remember that inflation underpins the Dr. Evil "One Million Dollars" joke, which still works.

Now, I'm no economist myself, but some of Piketty's figures seem a little sketchy. For instance, in a section about real estate, Piketty says that a million-euro apartment in Paris rents for 2,500 euros a month, which works out to a 3 percent annual return. Let's try that with Boston: Walk into a real estate office on Newbury Street and tell them you're looking to rent a million-dollar condo for $2,500 a month, per the reckoning of a bestselling economist. Everyone will have a good laugh and then show you what you can actually get for that amount of money, which is a rail car with sawdust on the floor parked out in Brighton. Your roommate will be named Hobo Joe, and he will steal your baked beans if you don't keep an eye on him.

What else? You might imagine that, because he's French, Piketty's prose is florid and romantic and he wants everyone to work 25-hour weeks and take two-hour lunches devoted to wine and lovemaking. Uh, non. Dude is cold. There's one point where he says something like "The term 'human capital' is irrelevant, because you can't actually own humans. Slavery is a historic phenomenon, for now." For now? This guy's so analytical that he's leaving himself an out in case the computers enslave us all when the Singularity arrives in 2029. In which case, he'll run new numbers.

It's important to remember that inflation underpins the Dr. Evil "One Million Dollars" joke...

Let me distill the rest of it for you: The rich get richer. Money is like a snowball rolling downhill, and the people with big balls are going to get all the money. Capital is something you own that makes money, so your dog doesn't count. Unless your dog is like Rin Tin Tin, who was both a dog and capital, so you can see it's a complicated subject. The end.



That's about all I got out of my $48 purchase, other than eyestrain and an ongoing low-level sense of regret. I mean, this book has equations in it. And I didn't graduate college to read equations. I made it to page 225 before I gave up and started using the book for more practical purposes, like counterbalancing my forklift or serving as a land anchor for hot-air balloons. The Wall Street Journal noted that of Capital's top five reader-cited passages on Amazon, the one deepest in the book appears on page 26. What an amazing coincidence that all the best parts are right at the front. It appears that I'm not the only fraud who bought this thing and then realized that if it were any drier, it'd spontaneously combust.

Now that I've given up on Capital in the Twenty-First Century, I'm free to find my next book. And there's another book that's so hugely popular that I have to assume it's really well written: Fifty Shades of Grey, a work whose very title speaks to literary nuance. Hey, my wife seemed to like it. ◆

POWER PLAYS

THE PROLIFIC PLAYWRIGHT WEIGHS IN ON RACE, FREEDOM AND THE CURE FOR WRITER'S BLOCK.

PULITZER-WINNING PLAYWRIGHT SUZAN-LORI PARKS, 51, was born in Kentucky and raised in Germany and the United States. She attended Mount Holyoke College, where she studied under James Baldwin, and received a MacArthur Genius Grant in 2001. In 2002, she became the first African American woman to win the Pulitzer Prize for drama with her play Topdog/Underdog. In addition to her numerous works for theater—she created 365 plays in 365 days and has had her work staged worldwide—she has written screenplays for Spike Lee and Oprah Winfrey and is the author of the novel Getting Mother's Body. She lives with her husband and young son in New York, where she teaches at NYU. Her three-part play Father Comes Home from the Wars—set during the Civil War and inspired in part by Greek tragedy—plays through March 1 in Cambridge at the American Repertory Theater's Loeb Drama Center.

JONATHAN SOROFF: You were named one of Time magazine's 100 Innovators.
SUZAN-LORI PARKS: Yeah, but I don't know where I am on the list. I might be number 100. Could've just squeaked in there.

How are you an innovator? I have no clue. I don't think too much about what I do. I just do it.

365 plays in 365 days... I suppose that's an example of innovation. Or insanity. Even more insane, we produced them all over the world, in 700 theaters from Berlin to Beijing to Boston to Myanmar.

Has anyone else done that? Not that I know of. Like so many of the things I write, it started as a joke. It was like, "Isn't that funny? It rhymes!" Same with the idea of adapting the book of Gershwin's Porgy and Bess. Hahahahaha!

What play made you want to become a playwright? It wasn't a play. It was James Baldwin, who was my professor. He suggested that I might be good at it. I was not a theater person, but I was very animated in his creative writing class. He suggested I try my hand at it, and that's still what I'm doing today: trying my hand at writing plays.

You're also a musician? I am. I play guitar. And one of the things I'm most excited about with this play is that it has songs in it I wrote. Both the music and the lyrics. I'm pretty proud of that.

Do you ever get writer's block? I have a 3-year-old. If you're a writer and you're having problems, all you need to do is get yourself a 3-year-old. You'll look at writing as a piece of cake.

Stage vs. screen writing? The biggest difference is scale. When I write plays, I see it in my head as if it were being performed live, on a stage, and when I write a film, I see it as if it's up on a screen. When I wrote my novel (and I'm working on a second one), it's like a video game, a second life.

Do you think we live in a post-racial society? Thank you for asking that. We were asking that question with real sincerity about four years ago. My personal opinion was "Hell, no!" A lot of my friends were like, "OK, another angry black woman." But my sincere opinion was "Maybe you decided not to worry about it anymore, but I still have to try to get a cab on the street."

What does "living in a post-racial society" even mean? I don't know. I guess it's "Well, gosh, I'm so tired of hearing you guys complain!" [Laughs]

What's the biggest problem in race relations now? I think people don't know how to talk about others as people first and foremost. It's basic. Most people of European descent don't know how to talk about people of African descent as just people. They're "black people." And it's not just a race-relations problem. It's a human-relations problem. It even has less to do with race than we'd like to believe. It exists between women and men, straight people and gay people, whatever. People just don't tend to think of each other as human beings.

What keeps racism alive and well? It's profitable. Racism is a money-making disease. You pit one group against another, somebody's makin' money. Scholars have written brilliantly about this.

Who's making money off it today? When you have the workers set against each other, unable to unite, the 1 percent are profiting from it. It's very advantageous to keep everyone separate. Keep women disliking themselves. They're more likely to go out and buy shit. Ka-ching!

"'Freedom isn't free.' It's a responsibility.... I think we free ourselves by becoming mindful."

What's your definition of freedom? I'll quote a play I wrote, called Fucking A. "Freedom isn't free." It's responsibility. Which is a great joy.... I think we free ourselves by becoming mindful. That's what freedom is: mindfulness.

Is art a key to that door? Depends. I've seen a lot of art that's deeply enmeshed in the bullshit. The Oscars, the Grammys, the Emmys, the Tonys? Do we not all think that they're deeply beholden to the system? It's just not as nurturing, loving and supportive as it could be, and with no loss of revenue. It's amazing people don't realize love can make you lots of money, too. Oprah does it. Bill Gates does it. The pope is a rich man, and he knows he can get a lot richer if he's open and loving. The bell went off in his head—I'm gonna hug some people, open my heart, and the Church gets a little richer, because people are like, "I'm in!" It's just smart.

Are the Russian novelists a big influence on you? I love Chekhov. But the Greeks are a bigger influence, and Shakespeare is huge. He's my main dead white guy that I love.

What's the difference between honesty and truth? What a great question. That distinction is very important to me in this play. Honest, to me, means you are respectful of the system. You play by the rules. You don't lie or cheat, even though the rules are screwy at times, which means that honesty doesn't necessarily mean your behavior is going to be laudatory. True, on the other hand, means being true to oneself and something greater than oneself. It's more idealistic, perhaps. Then there's faithful, which means belief in the great love. The love that is bigger than a system. An absolute unconditional love. That's the spectrum in my play. ◆

A Look at 20 Beguiling Locals Sure to Catch Your Eye

THE COURSE OF CUPID'S ARROW can be unpredictable—frankly, we're not so sure about that guy's aim. Fortunately for those of you who are still searching, we like to give him a little help every February, highlighting charismatic and accomplished locals whose impressive credentials have us all wondering: How can someone with so much in their favor still be single? As always, we polled our readers and considered their suggestions, in addition to hand-picking some of our own. After peppering them with intrusive questions to see what makes them tick, we gathered them all at South End hotspot Wink & Nod for a combo photo shoot and cocktail party. Et voila! Meet Boston's Most Eligible Singles, Class of 2015.

"I love to build bikes. I've built five for my friends."

Bar manager at PARK Restaurant + Bar

Surprise on his CV: A master's degree in neuroscience. After leaving the lab, I pursued bartending at PARK, where I honed my technique and learned to work with skill, precision and speed.

Ear candy: NPR is a constant in my life.

Esoteric pursuit: I brew kombucha. I have cultures that are 4 years old at this point, and I love sharing them with friends and neighbors who are interested.

Other creative outlets: I love to build bikes. I've built five for my friends.

Special skill: I'm bilingual. Being from Montreal, I grew up speaking French in the house but learned English at the age of 7.

Best feature: My height. Second would be my facial hair.

Celebrity crush: Daniel Radcliffe.

Breakfast at Tiffany's* moment: I once brought my crush a cooler of his favorite oysters to his office, and we had oysters and Champagne for lunch.

Biggest dating disaster: Going on a blind date, only to realize it was the guy my ex was sleeping with when we broke up.

Romance in six words or less: Buenos Aires, with Fernet and cola.

Worst pick-up line he ever received: "I know your mother. She was my professor. I think we should hang out."

LEAH SUGRUE, 28

Senior stylist at Salon Mario Russo

The basics: I'm very creative and artistic. Whether I'm working at the salon or doing editorial work, fashion shows or DIY projects at home, I love working with my hands to make something.

Career highlight: Being part of the L'Oreal team at Mercedes-Benz Fashion Week. I had the opportunity to style hair for designers like Jason Wu, Monique Lhuillier, Phillip Lim and Tory Burch.

Don't judge: As creepy as it sounds, I love to people watch; you can sit back and see the world from a completely different angle.

Celebrity crush: Hands down, Jared Leto. It started with My So-Called Life, so basically I was 8. To me, he looks like a badass Jesus.

Craziest thing she's done for love: I was invited to go on a ski trip in the Italian Alps. One little problem: I didn't know how to ski. I said yes anyway and frantically learned how to ski in three months.

Biggest dating disaster: I went on a date with a guy who had three credit cards declined, so I paid the bill. He was really embarrassed.

Trend alert: I'm really into the "man bun" right now.

Her idea of romance: Someone who pays attention to the little things. It is so nice when a guy remembers your favorite bottle of wine, the food you like or a movie that makes you laugh. Extravagant gifts and trips are nice, but don't last like a simple gesture.

JOSH COLE, 31

Product liaison/distribution associate for Olmstead Wine & The Wine Bottega

HOSPITALITY HAD HIM AT HELLO: It started with a little, family-run, old-world pizzeria and continued in college at Loyola University. I was captivated by New Orleans—the food, music, energy, people and, most of all, the general sense of hospitality. I shucked oysters and bartended my way through school.

TODAY: I help to spread the word on delicious, small-production, naturally made wines. We're trying to get real, authentic juice into more people's glasses.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: I would happily grab a drink with Rashida Jones or Zoe Saldana.

QUIRKY HOBBIES: Shopping for records and antique glassware.

HIS HAPPY PLACE: Summers growing up were spent camping and working on boats in Plymouth Harbor. To this day, I feel at home and rejuvenated in nature.

HIDDEN SKILL: I make some of my best meals while standing over a campfire.

ICE BUCKET CHALLENGE, WHO? Over the past few years, I've completed multiple 15-plus-mile paddleboard races to raise money for ALS awareness.

CORE VALUES: I was raised to help others and to always look to lend a hand.

IF HIS IDEAL WOMAN WERE A GRAPE VARIETAL: She would be frappato. Indigenous to Sicily, this grape is delicate but rugged.

HANADI HAMZEH, 28

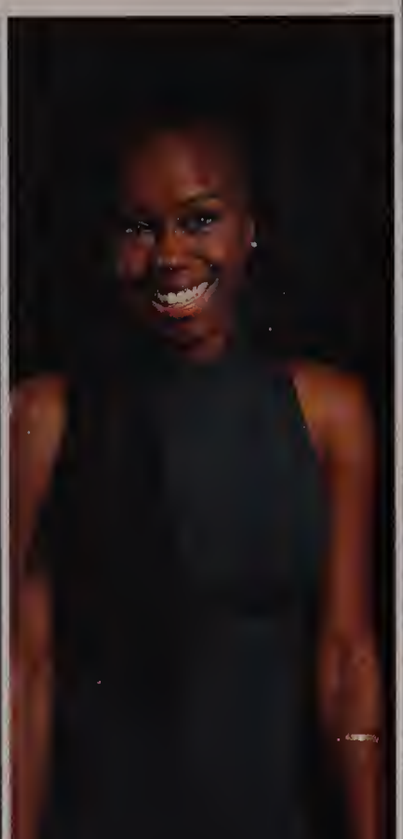
Owner of Covet consignment boutique

SURPRISE ON HER CV: After studying medical laboratory science at Northeastern and doing co-ops at Children's Hospital and Mass General, I got a job at MGH managing a small lab. I really loved it, and it gave me a good deal of autonomy—which gave me the confidence I needed to open my own business.

ADDICTION: I'm a news and politics junkie. Election season is my thang! I listen to NPR every morning, and I'm basically always reading news sites and blogs when I have a free moment.

ON HER LAP, YOU'LL FIND: Olive, my 5-pound rescue Chihuahua. She's my right-hand man, in the shop with me every day.

ON HER PLATE, YOU'LL FIND: No meat. I'm a pescatarian.



AT LEAST SHE KNOWS IT: I hate to admit this, but I can definitely be a know-it-all. But I'm working on it.

HER IDEA OF ROMANCE: Doing sweet things because you want to, not because you have to. I love the idea of seeing something and giving it to someone simply because you thought of the other person. Thoughtfulness doesn't need an occasion.

FUN FACT: I have a twin sister named Dalia.

THING THAT DRIVES HER CRAZY (IN A GOOD WAY): A well-dressed man. I'm hoping that soon the men of Boston will realize there's more to clothes than just a striped button-down and jeans.

DYLAN PETITT, 27

Finance/accounting recruiter and former Bachelorette contestant

Career trajectory: I left accounting to become a recruiter at BNG Consulting, Inc. I've only been a recruiter for four months, but I really enjoy it.

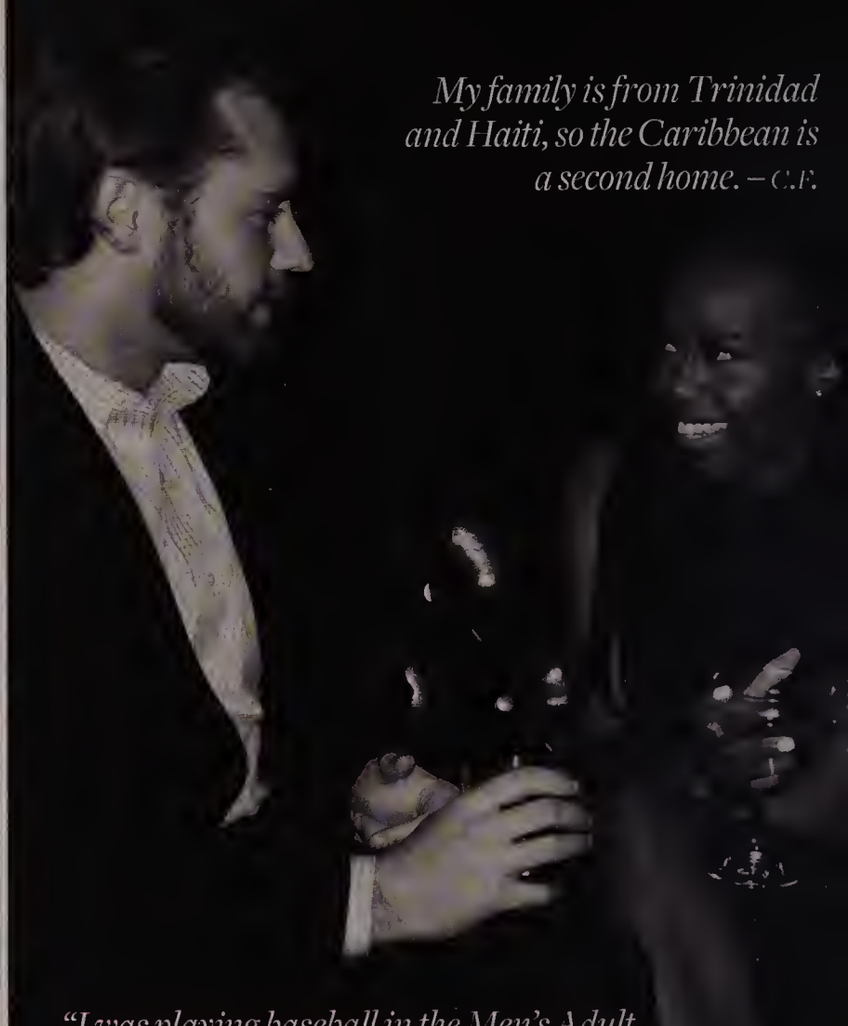
In his spare time: I'm very big on going to the gym, the beach, and playing sports. I was playing baseball in the Men's Adult Baseball League two years ago.

Biggest dating disaster: Going out on a Tinder date and having my ex-girlfriend show up where we were.

Dealbreaker: Smoking.

Craziest thing he ever did for love (or lust): Go on national television and dance on [Bachelorette host] Chris Harrison [earning the admiration of the otherwise cold-hearted Andi].

Did he really expect to find true love on The Bachelorette? I thought it was possible, but after a few weeks I knew it wasn't for me.



Best part of doing reality TV: Lifelong friendships.

Special skills: I can do a French braid. That's about all I've got.

Celebrity crush: Jennifer Aniston.

His idea of romance: Pizza, white wine and a romantic comedy.

Does he approach dating the same way he approaches recruiting? No, but that's probably a good thing, since I was dumped on national TV. There are some similarities with cold calling, though.

My family is from Trinidad and Haiti, so the Caribbean is a second home. – C.F.

CAMILLE FORDE, 27

Corporate responsibility manager and fashion blogger

Current project: I'm doing a capsule wardrobe challenge, in which I wear a predetermined number of items (shoes included) for a three-month period. No shopping allowed. I'm amazed at how much I'm able to do with only a few pieces.

Philosophy: Doing my blog opened my eyes to the excess of my life. I had a closetful of clothes and this insatiable desire for more.... Over time, I've truly embraced that less is indeed more, and experiences are more valuable than possessions.

Fashion bona fides: Being a guest editor for Marie Claire magazine was an amazing honor.

Charity of choice: I'm on the board of advisers of Thompson Island Outward Bound.

On her itinerary: The more I travel, the more I learn. My family is from Trinidad and Haiti, so the Caribbean is a second home. I absolutely love London. However, Casablanca is one of the most memorable places I've been. In April, I'm heading to Beijing to explore and to climb the Great Wall of China.

Notes on love: My friend's dad used to write her mom love letters when they were dating, and now their daughters have the letters as a keepsake. In this day of electronic messaging, the personal gestures are even more romantic.

"The cougars love the dimples" – C.B.

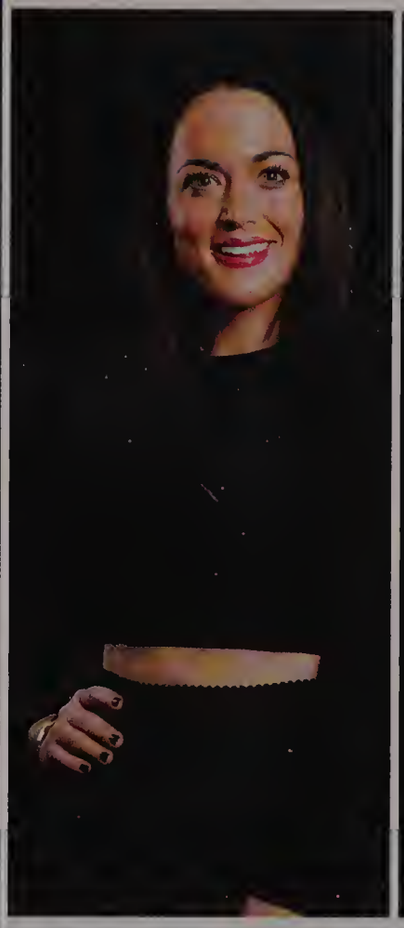
ANDREA STARR, 28

Owner of Eyestarr lash boutique

By the sweat of her brow: I started working on Newbury Street when I was 20, doing lash extensions and brows. I quickly started building a clientele, and by 22, I was managing the company.

Bold move: At 24, I decided to start my own business. I own an adorable storefront and absolutely love what I do.

Apple of her eye: I'm a mother to an amazing 7-year-old girl who is my entire world and whole heart.



In her downtime: I like to practice magic and witchcraft. Just kidding! I like to read and write, and to cook. I love to travel and explore. Staying active. Trying new restaurants. Watching Shark Tank. Writing business plans. Doing yoga. Going to concerts.

Her fitness routine: Running. I like to do on-demand workouts and stay hydrated with wine. I ski with my daughter (pretty badly), and we just signed up for tennis lessons.

Turn-offs: Somebody who still plays video games or is into wrestling, guys who wear earrings, bros.

On her to-do list: I've never been to Paris, but I would love to go someday.

Flirting M.O.: In the moment, I smile and play with my hair a little, but I don't think I do anything intentional. I like things to happen unexpectedly and organically. I'm a big fan of a natural connection and chemistry.

COREY BUNNEWITH, 26

Co-founder of Boston Harbor Distillery

Grape escape: I enrolled in the Culinary Institute of America to study Baking and Pastry Arts, but I left to pursue a passion for wine, starting with a cellar-master internship at Balthazar.

Here in Boston: I launched Coppa's bar program. Then, in 2011, I helped launch Inspired Beverage, a brand-management firm for craft spirits and boutique wines.

Special skills: Oyster shucking, cigar cutting and knowing all of Jimmy Buffett's lyrics.

Charities of choice: I support No Kid Hungry and Lovin' Spoonfuls and serve on the advisory and fundraising board for vocational technical education at Blackstone Valley Regional Technical High School.

Awards and honors: I was named a Mixologist to Watch by Beverage Media in 2009 and featured in The Improper's 2010 Beloved Bartenders issue.

How he stays in fighting shape: A daily dose of kettlebells and a blue belt in Brazilian jiujitsu.

Other hobbies: Skiing, collecting vinyl, and I'm about to start learning Portuguese.

Best feature: Probably the red hair and blue eyes, but the cougars love the dimples.

On a first date: My A-game would be wrapping Christmas presents and cating Korean food.

What drink best describes his love life? More bourbon, bigger glass.

"For me, it's 'Corporate by day, shows by night.'"

"I love music of all kinds, from country to opera, and I go to concerts as much as I can."

DONALD GREGORIO, 31

Executive assistant/producer at a marketing agency and drag performer

On his double life: As the saying goes, "Business in the front, party in the back." For me, it's "Corporate by day, shows by night."

At work: I've been referred to as the "Jack of all trades" and the "Velvet Hammer."

On drag as a drug: I started off as that person who said, "I'd never do drag!" and now I'm that person who says, "I can't get enough!" I've been doing it since 2009, and I've evolved my persona, "Dee Dee de Ray."

Other pastimes: Musical theater, dance and choreography. (I was nominated for Best Choreography by the Independent Reviewers of New England.)

Proud achievement: The President's Volunteer Service Award from Citizen Schools.

Domestic skills: I've developed a passion for cooking food from my culture, plus baking. I was first taught how to bake by my grandfather, who owned a bakery in the Philippines. You won't find me using any Betty Crocker boxed mixes.

Does he expect a guy to be as attracted to him in drag? With the number of hours it takes? Hell, yes! Just kidding. To be honest, no.... I'd wonder if it's only while I'm in drag and whether it's a "thing" sexually. I would hope that first and foremost they are sexually attracted to me as my male self and, if in drag, for the dedication and ambition I put into it.

ANGELA RAPPOLI, 30

Retail and restaurant real estate specialist

Provenance: I'm a Masshole through and through—born and raised on the North Shore.

Job satisfactions: Our team has brokered locations for Barcelona Wine Bar, Turnstyle Cycle, Wink & Nod and Rosebud American Kitchen, to name some recent ones.

Charity of choice: I'm very involved with Fenway Health, one of the leading health care institutions for the LGBT community. I've served on the Young Leaders Council Steering Committee and participated in Harbor to the Bay (an annual 126-mile fundraising bike ride), and this year, I'm co-chairing the Women's Dinner Party, which raises more than $500,000 annually.

Hostess with the mostest: I love throwing parties and entertaining. I used to run a monthly traveling takeover bar night, called GirlSpot, to fill a void in nightlife for women at the time.

Pastimes: I love music of all kinds, from country to opera, and I go to concerts as much as I can.

Preferred position: Growing up, I played goalie in field hockey, ice hockey and lacrosse.

Nerd alert: I'm fascinated by languages and have a pretty good command of four. I also once translated Virgil's entire Aeneid from Latin and loved every minute of it.

Celebrity crush: Anne Hathaway (before she cut her hair off).

SANDY KREIS, 32

Entrepreneur in residence at Blade and visiting lecturer at Tufts University

In a few words: A classy broad with a dash of hippie.

Credentials: My mom is a big fan of the Grateful Dead and took me to nine shows.

Life lessons: When I was 7, my dad passed away from cancer. My mom raised me and my sister on her own, and she even took in two kids who were having trouble at home.

Eloise experience: When I worked as a paralegal in N.Y., one of my cases went to trial in Palm Beach, and I lived at the Breakers for three months. That's when I learned how to drink a dirty martini.

L.A. interlude: I worked for an advocacy group pushing climate change legislation, and I had lunch with Alicia Silverstone, met Bill Clinton, watched Gov. Schwarzenegger order cookies at a bakery and had an awkward conversation with Al Gore and Cameron Diaz.

Asian adventures: After auditioning for a yearlong travel project, I got a call from Korea asking if I would host a YouTube show called Sell Your Seoul. I hopped on a plane, chopped through wood in tae kwon do, took an archery class, made kimchi and fell in love with yet another country. After that, I backpacked solo through China, Thailand and Laos.

Outdoorsy much? Nature is my church. I'm a huge hiker, trail runner and sunset hunter. My adopted mutt, Sebbie, is always by my side.

JOSH FALK, 35

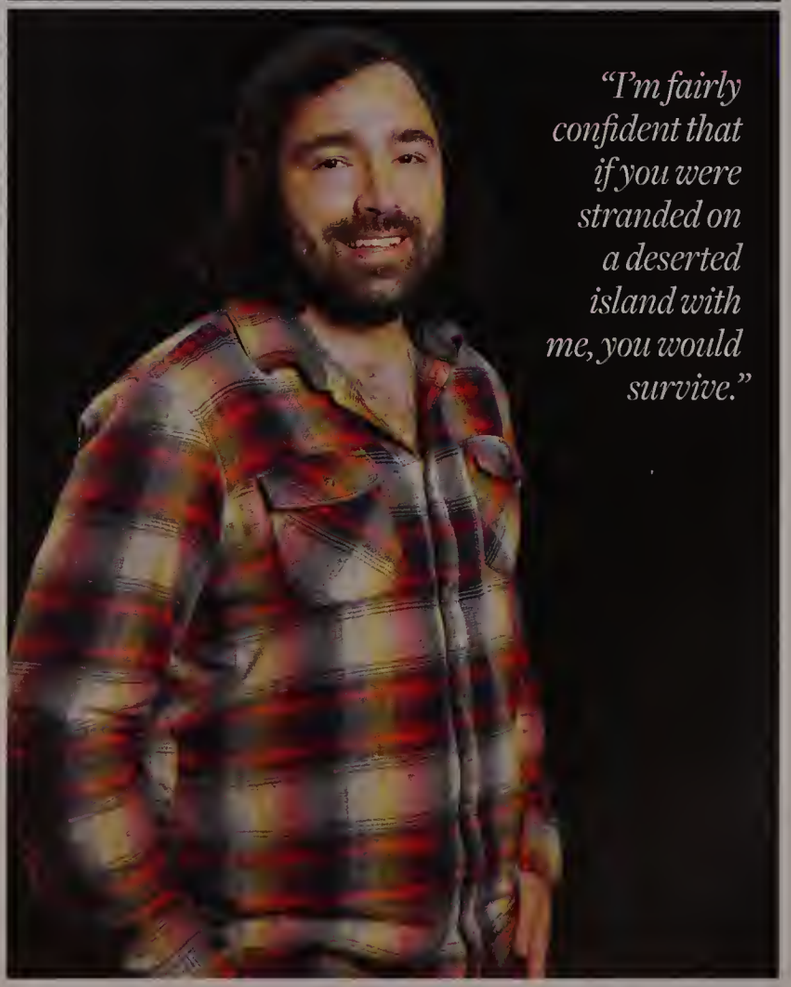
Co-owner of Studio Fresh, specializing in large-scale murals, art projects and signage

Creative pursuits: Photography, painting, sculpture, installations, woodworking and being a general maker of things. I love to explore the city's forgotten or misunderstood areas with my camera in tow.

Painting the town: I've worked with Artward Bound, a MassArt program where I helped create a series of 3-D murals for Community Boat Building (also a rad organization). I helped kids sketch and make models of their ideas, and we built, painted and installed the murals. It was a huge success.

Latest hobby: I've been working on/rebuilding 1970s motorcycles.

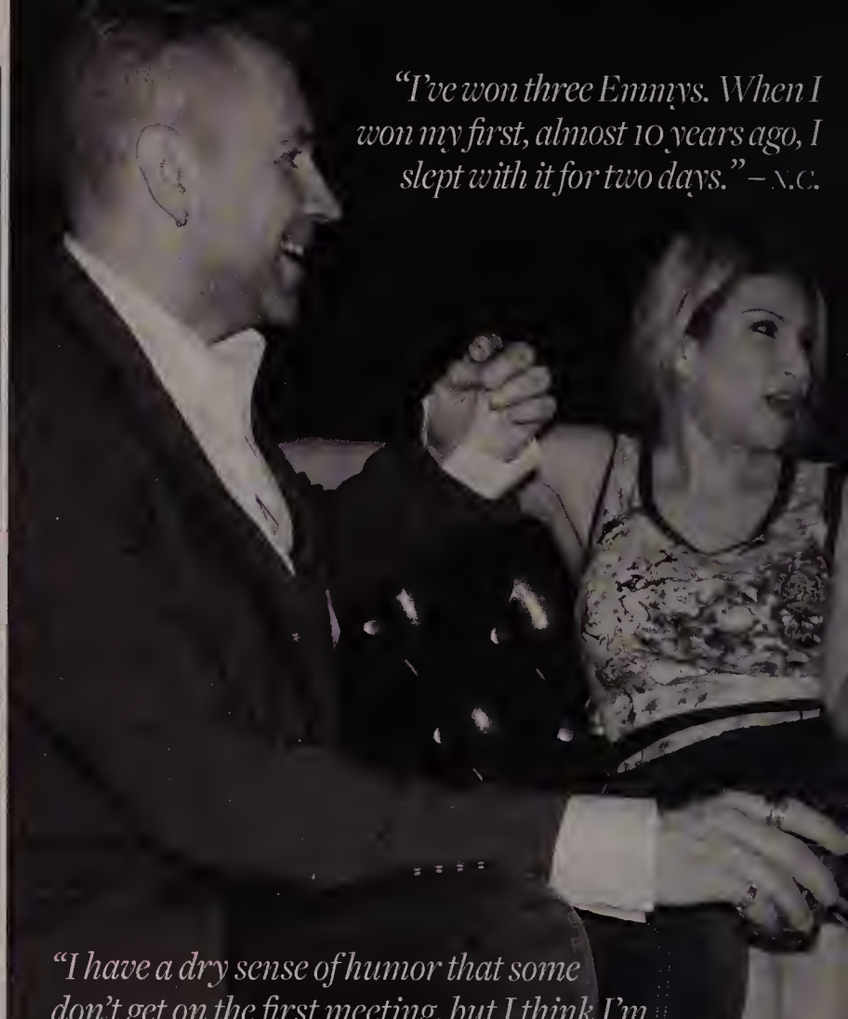
Robinson Crusoe cred: I'm fairly confident that if you were stranded on a deserted island with me, you would survive.



On a first date: I ask as many questions as possible.

His Greg Brady moment: I once tried dating more than one girl at a time. When my date and her friend arrived, I quickly realized that her wing-girl was the same wing-girl of the other girl I was dating. They all went to the same school.

Up for dating a 9-to-5er? As long as she's not opposed to getting dirty from time to time and is willing to put up with my erratic work schedule.



Quote of note: I like to get lost only to find my way again.

"I've won three Emmys. When I won my first, almost 10 years ago, I slept with it for two days." – N.C.

"I have a dry sense of humor that some don't get on the first meeting, but I think I'm a pretty OK guy." – S.S.

NELLY CARREÑO, 34

Meteorologist for NECN

BEEN THERE, DONE THAT: I've forecasted weather for Telemundo in Chicago and Dallas, and although weather is my passion, I've also been a news anchor, producer and reporter, covering the Billboard and MTV Music Video Awards.

WHO NEEDS STUFFED ANIMALS? I've won three Emmys. When I won my first, almost 10 years ago, I slept with it for two days.

SECRET GOAL: I hope to one day open a Mexican restaurant here in Boston!

CRAZIEST THING SHE EVER DID FOR LOVE: Flying to Martha's Vineyard in a tiny plane. I'm petrified of flying in small planes, and we hit some crazy head-wind turbulence before landing safely. I wanted to kiss the ground and punch my date.

WORST TRAIT: Bit of a fiery temper.

MEMORABLE FIRST DATE: He picked me up at 4:30 am, and we drove to a field. It was still dark, but when we got there, a man was waiting in a beautiful, multicolored hot-air balloon. The ride was gorgeous, and we had Champagne and strawberries. He got a second date.

IF SHE WERE A STORM, SHE'D BE: A "firenado"—a spectacular mix of fire and tornado, two of nature's fiercest phenomena in one. Boom!

SECRET SKILLS: I kill at charades, and I'm a very good poker player.

YOU'D NEVER KNOW: I've broken my nose three times.

YOU MAY HAVE NOTICED: I have a hard time pronouncing "February" and "astronaut."

STACEY STEPHENS, 47

Associate producing director of Fiddlehead Theatre Company

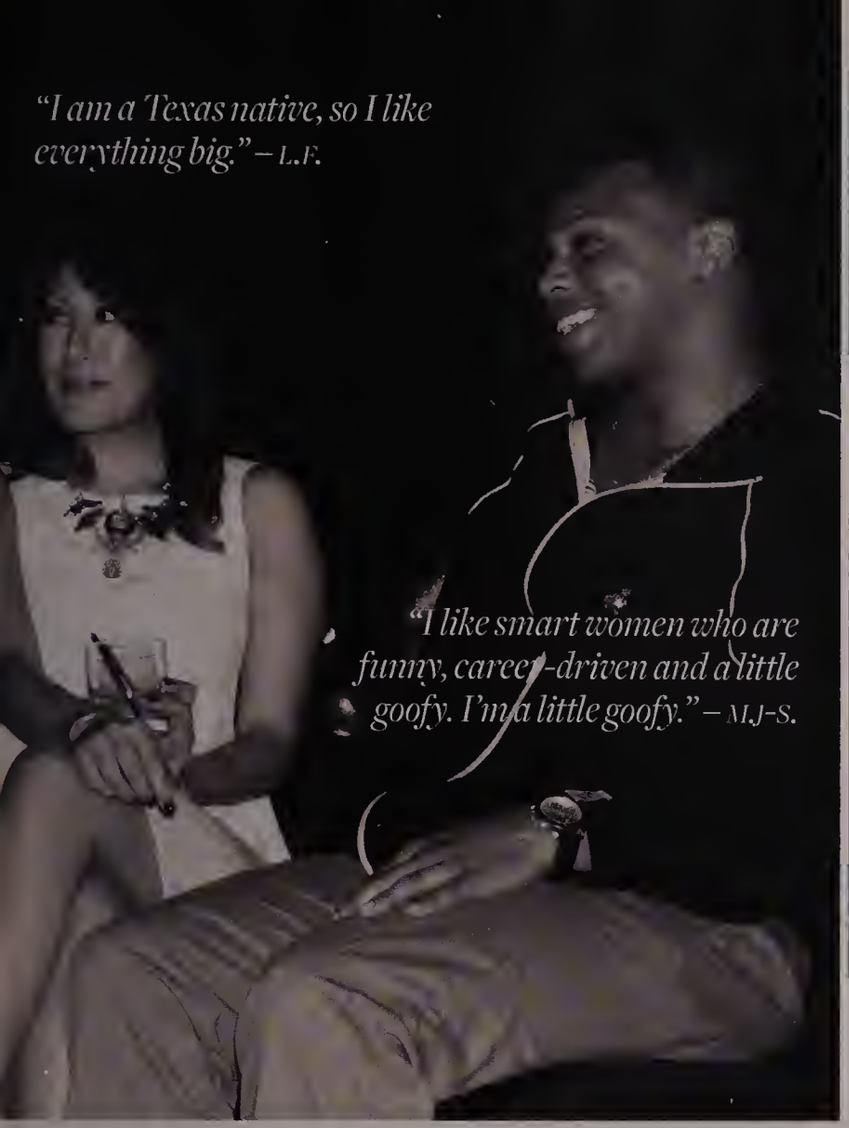
SMALL-TOWN ROOTS: I was born in Waupaca, Wis., population 4,500.

BIG-CITY DREAMS: After a year of college, I moved to New York City to attend the American Musical and Dramatic Academy.

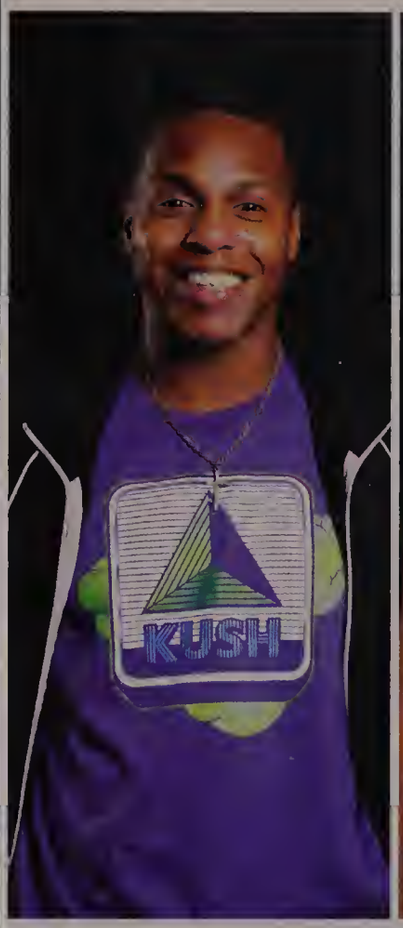
LANDING HIS ROLE: I pursued acting for several years before finding my place backstage, in wardrobe for the Broadway production of Miss Saigon.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: The first national tours of Lion King, Wicked and Memphis. And that Fiddlehead is the resident theater company for Boston's historic Strand Theatre.

ACCOLADES: Six Independent Reviewers of New England awards.



SPECIAL SKILLS: I can roll my tongue both ways. And I'm really good at spending money.



CELEBRITY CRUSH: Ramin Karimloo, Broadway's current Jean Valjean of Les Misérables, and Jon Hamm. Do I have to choose?

SUCKER FOR: A man with long eyelashes.

ARE DIRECTORS CONTROL FREAKS? Yes. Just do what I say.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS: I have a dry sense of humor that some don't get on the first meeting, but I think I'm a pretty OK guy. I'm full of paradoxes: selfish and giving, cocky and insecure, outgoing and shy, humble and vain.

MARCUS JOHNSON-SMITH, 29

Founder of Clearwater Branding Company and co-founder of the Kush Groove clothing line

GIVING BACK: Most of my career has been in the nonprofit sector, working with YouthBuild USA, the Boys & Girls Clubs and the Boston Foundation.

HIS WAY WITH WORDS: I'm the author of several books, including Coming into Adulthood in Today's America: Stories of My Final 100 Days of College and Visionary to Actionary: A Seven Step Guide to Transform Your Vision into Action.

THAT'S NOT ALL: I'm also a partner with an eyeglass accessories company in Canada called Stikks.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Rita Ora. We'd look cute together.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I know how to roll a nice joint.

ON A FIRST DATE: I like to save time for a short walk.

DEALBREAKER: On a first date, Instagramming in front of me.

HIS IDEA OF ROMANCE: A warm, sunny day in an open Jeep. She's driving. We're smiling at each other and listening to good music.

HIS TYPE: I think all women, no matter what, have a unique sex appeal. I like smart women who are funny, career-driven and a little goofy. I'm a little goofy. I'm extremely motivated and want to accomplish a lot.

LISA FLORES, 34

Director of sales and marketing for Columbus Hospitality Group

ORIGINS: Half Mexican, half Korean—I've been referred to as a kimchee taco several times.

DIRTY LITTLE SECRET: I am a Texas native, so I like everything big (wink, wink)!

CHARITY OF CHOICE: Helping Hands, which provides monkey helpers to the severely impaired. I've been an event chair for the past five years, and I've cleaned cages and fed the monkeys, so I know the charity top to bottom.

WHAT'S ON HER PLATE: I started off as a hostess at Mistral the summer before my senior year of college and worked my way up the ranks. Now I sell and plan the events at Mistral, Teatro, Sorellina and the private room at Ostra. I also do the marketing and advertising for the group.

CURRENT OBSESSION: Tennis. I have two coaches who don't know about each other.

VAIN ABOUT: Having perfectly manicured nails. I go between classic colors and cool nail designs that I like to research on Instagram.

PERSONAL CATNIP: I love tall men in dope kicks. I like really cool sneakers with a suit or casualwear.

BAD HABIT: Uber abuse. I don't drive or have a license, and I plan on holding out as long as possible.

SEDUCTION DISH: Mistral's beef tenderloin and mashed potato pizza.

FRIEND ENDORSEMENT: "You can be fun, sassy and a little naughty. But when you meet his mom, you'll put on your pearls and cross your legs at the ankles."

TIM MASLOW, 30

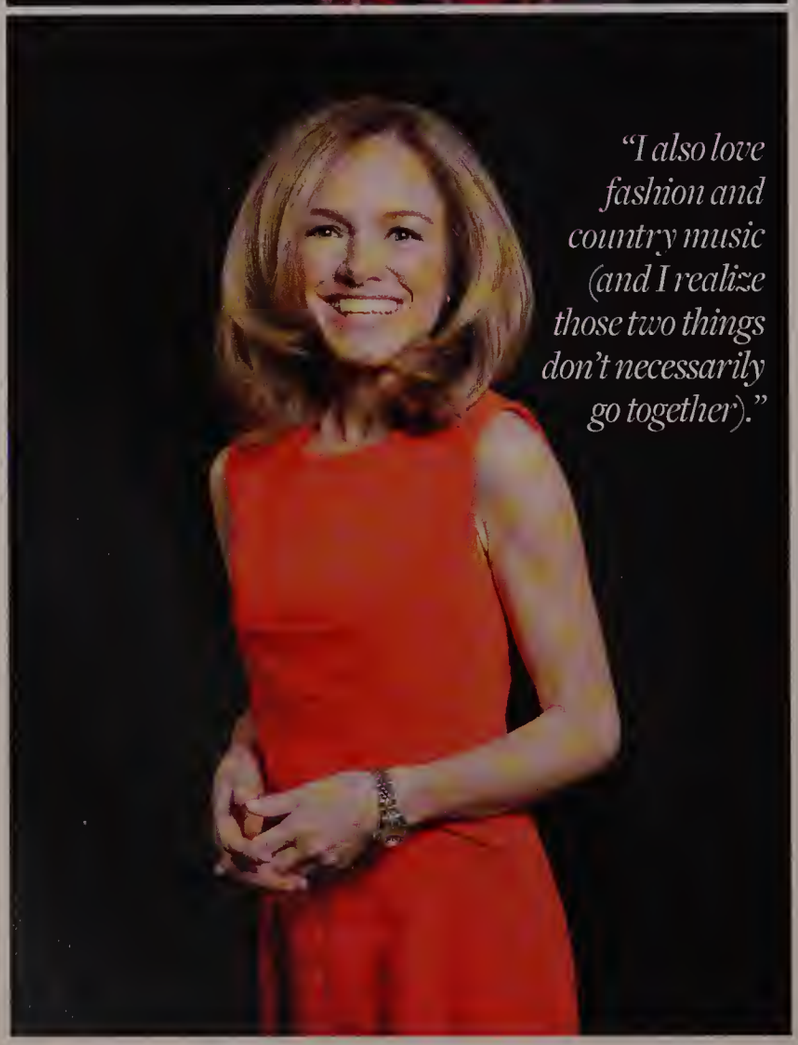
Executive chef at Strip T's and executive chef & owner at Ribelle

HOBBIES: Work is my hobby. But I've just started taking pottery classes, which I love.

SPECIAL SKILL: I can fucking roast a mean chicken.

BEST TRAIT: Dedication. But I've been told by some women that they're jealous of my eyelashes.

PROUDEST ACHIEVEMENT: Opening a rather large restaurant and living to tell about it.



CRAZIEST THING HE EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): In high school, I rigged an MP3 player to play a song for a girl when she opened her locker. It took a lot of favors to be able to get into her locker.

ON A FIRST DATE: I like to be completely candid about every facet of my life, leaving nothing for later, just to be certain no one is wasting their time.

PET PEEVE: If we go out to dinner and she asks for salt before tasting the food.

SWEET SPOT: There's one bench in particular on the Charles River, outside of Harvard Square, during twilight.

WHAT ROMANTIC PROSPECTS NEED TO UNDERSTAND ABOUT THE RESTAURANT BUSINESS: We have to be there on holidays, special events and late nights. The people I work with are family, so you'd better find a way to get along with them.

MARINA BUATTI, 42

Vice president of women investors for a financial services company

FROM RUSSIA, WITH LOVE: I immigrated to the U.S. with my family in 1980. We started with nothing. The immigrant experience made me appreciate hard work.

GETTING DOWN TO BUSINESS: My focus is engaging women in their finances and helping them make the most out of their investments. I feel like I'm helping women live the lives they want.

OTHER INTERESTS: I love skiing and yoga. I also love fashion and country music (and I realize those two things don't necessarily go together).

CENTER OF GRAVITY: I'm a mom to an 18-month-old boy and a 7-year-old adopted pup, Rocky (he's a frenchie/pug mix, a frug).

AT A RESTAURANT: I can pretty much pick a good bottle of wine off of any menu.

SUCKER FOR: Confidence. And I love a good head of hair on a man.

FIRST-DATE FAUX PAS: Sitting in a coffee shop for a first date is weird. I don't mean to offend, but it feels too much like a business meeting.

DESTINATION FOR ROMANCE: I love, love, love Cabo. It never rains there. And, of course, skiing out west.

DO MEN AND WOMEN INVEST DIFFERENTLY? Absolutely. Generalizing here, but men tend to focus more on performance, while women focus on the long term. Men are bigger risk-takers. Women are more risk-averse.

"I enjoy running and have finished four Boston Marathons, with a P.R. of 3:07 this past year."

ERIN MCDONALD, 36

Social worker, indoor cycling instructor and personal trainer

VARSITY BONA FIDES: I was captain of the field hockey and track and field teams my senior year in college.

HER DOUBLE LIFE: By day, I work to recruit foster parents. By night, I am an indoor cycling instructor for the Handle Bar, and I work privately as a personal trainer.

ON PLAYING MRS. CLAUS: I organized a clothing and toy drive for the Department of Children and Families, and I organize the sponsoring of families in need every holiday season, recruiting local business to donate gifts.

ENDORPHIN SOURCE: I enjoy running and have finished four Boston Marathons, with a P.R. of 3:07 this past year. I'm running my fifth in April, and I hope to break my record.

MUST LOVE DOGS: I'm obsessed with my two dogs—Oscar, a multipoo, and Hunter, a tripod toy poodle.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: I have two: Jimmy Fallon, because he's absolutely hysterical and cute, and Tom Brady, because he's perfect.

REFRESHING TRAIT: I am super low-maintenance.

DATING DISASTER: I was set up on a blind date, and our waitress ended up being his ex-girlfriend. She decided to ask me in front of him if I knew he was a cheater.

GUILTY PLEASURES: Bravo (reality TV), TMZ and chocolate chip cookies.

"I eat pizza almost every night."

WILLIAM O'MALLEY, 35

Vice president of investments for Stifel

GOOD DEEDS: I volunteer at the Pine Street Inn once a week and coach basketball at Thayer Academy. I'm also on the board of Wellesley High School's A Better Chance program, which helps academically talented young women of color from underserved communities. And I recently fought in the charity boxing tournament Haymakers for Hope. I lost the fight, but we raised more than $300,000 for cancer research.

NEW ROUTINE: I recently took an interest in boxing after training with George Foreman III for my boxing fight.

DEALBREAKER: A girl who isn't nice to her mother.

BEST FEATURE: Loyalty.

WORST TRAIT: I eat pizza almost every night.

PROUD ACHIEVEMENT: One of my former basketball players is featured in this month's Sports Illustrated as high school athlete of the month.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Jennifer Lawrence.

CRAZIEST THING HE EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): With a fear of flying, I have traveled to places I thought I would never go.

FAVORITE QUOTE: "If you aren't making someone else's life better, then you are wasting your time." People don't realize that spending a small amount of time volunteering can help a kid can go a long way.

Whet their appetites.

METRO BOSTON'S MEDIUM-MELDING GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND MAKING NOISE

AGENDA for 2/11-2/24

Sound Garden

A new installation turns up the volume at the ICA.

ONE OF THE LAST TIMES ANDREW Bird was in town, he played an expansive open-air show in City Hall Plaza for the May 2013 installment of Boston Calling. If you drop by the ICA during the next few months, you'll have a ehanee to eateh a very different offering from the experimental indie/folk artist, thanks to Sonic Arboretum. A long-term collaboration with seulptor and instrument-maker Ian Sehneller, the multi-sensory sound sculpture premiered in 2010 at the Guggenheim and has sinee enjoyed a number of reprisals—and evolutions—across the eountry. The "arboretum" is eomposed of 36 speakers resembling old-fashioned Vietrola horns, whieh Schneller made from recyeled newspapers, dryer lint and baking soda. The horns play "Echoloeations: Canyon," a haunting original composition Bird ereated with merely his violin and the sounds of his own whistle echoing off the walls of a Utah eanyon. The ambient score, in tandem with Schneller's unique instruments, is meant to inspire refleetion upon nature, art and sound. Come take a stroll through the arboretum to see—and hear—for yourself through May 10 at the ICA. / Alexandra Cavallo

SONIC ARBORETUM is on display through May 10 at the Institute of Contemporary Art, 100 Northern Ave., Boston (617 478 3100) icaboston org. $15; $13, seniors; $10, students.

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

GIRL ON TOP We're not saying we're clairvoyant or anything, but we kinda crystal-balled Obehi Janice's upward trajectory when we named her Best Actress in our 2014 Boston's Best awards. Case in point: Fufu & Oreos—the show she both wrote and starred in as one of a select group of women in last year's XX Playlab—has been picked up by the Bridge Repertory Theater of Boston. A personal play melding comedy and drama, the one-woman show explores Janice's struggles as a "multicultural 20-something" trying to balance her Nigerian heritage with her modern American lifestyle. Presented in repertory with Dan LeFranc's Sixty Miles to Silver Lake, it runs through Feb. 27 at the Calderwood Pavilion. / Alexandra Cavallo

TAKE A PEAK Twin Peaks devotees rejoiced late last year when news broke that a nine-episode revival of the cult phenomenon was in the works for Showtime in 2016. But decades earlier (when they feared they would never see the Log Lady again), creator David Lynch answered the drama around the drama's cancellation with Twin Peaks: Fire Walk with Me, a feature film prequel that depicts Laura Palmer's final days. Shown on Feb. 23 at the Brattle Theatre, the film kicks off a 25th anniversary celebration of the series, which continues with 10 more nights of screenings of Lynch's offbeat creations. Grab some damn fine coffee and catch the rest of his flicks Feb. 23 through March 5. / Kate Joseph

AMERICAN SNIPER ★★★ We've grown used to Bradley Cooper as a comic performer, but director Clint Eastwood recognized something deeper. We first view Cooper's Chris Kyle as he's staring down the scope of his sniper rifle at his target: an Iraqi boy holding a grenade. As Chris trains his sights on this young killer, who can't be more than 7 or 8 years old, Eastwood cuts to Chris as a child in Texas, shooting a deer during an inaugural hunt with his dad. "That was one hell of a shot," Wayne Kyle (Ben Reed) tells his son. "You got a gift." That gift leads Chris to become a Navy SEAL. Called for service on the day he weds Taya (Sienna Miller, strong in an underwritten, weepy role), he heads for a solitary honeymoon in Iraq, where his bullet will rip through that grenade-wielding child's chest. This will stand as the first of an unmatched 160 confirmed kills across four tours of duty, earning Chris the nickname "The Legend," as Cooper subtly projects the effects of PTSD. While the adaptation of Kyle's autobiography has taken heat as an endorsement of 'Merica's war machine, this is Eastwood at his most apolitical, no matter what chair he prefers talking to. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

BLACKHAT ★★ Michael Mann, the talented auteur behind 1995's Heat, can still stage a street-level shootout like nobody's business—they come at the 60- and 90-minute marks in this otherwise inert 133-minute film—but there's really not much need for automatic gunfire in a film about computer hackers tracking another hacker, is there? Chris Hemsworth (aka Thor) plays Nick Hathaway, the world's hunkiest hacker—just one goofy thing in Morgan Davis Foehl's silly screenplay. Nick's been doing time after hacking into a couple of banks, but when Chen Dawai (Leehom Wang), his former MIT roommate and a current Chinese government agent, requires help after a hacker melts down a nuclear reactor in China, Nick receives a get-out-of-jail-free card, plus a new girlfriend in the shapely form of Chen's sister (Wei Tang). Mann must've thought we'd be too distracted reading subtitles to notice that none of the Chinese dialogue syncs with the actors' mouths. Then again, none of the dialogue syncs with the hackneyed hacking plot, either. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

BLACK SEA ★★★ Jude Law continues to move away from the pretty-boy roles that defined most of his career with this efficient, suspenseful thriller set within the claustrophobic confines of a submarine. He's Robinson, the skipper who's commanding a crew of greedy misfits chasing sunken Nazi gold lost in the depths of the Black Sea. Anything that can go wrong does, beginning with the loose cannon (Ben Mendelsohn) who jams a knife into the chest of a Russian crewmate. As each of these men have been promised equal shares of any treasure they find, they increasingly turn on one another, and the deaths begin to pile up faster than the bricks of gold they're searching for. Director Kevin Macdonald (The Last King of Scotland) has fashioned a tight little thriller where "dark, cold death" is constantly threatened, and although it's not quite The Treasure of the Sierra Madre, it still offers an entertaining look into the dark hearts of desperate men. Unless the prospect of cramped quarters reminds you too much of rush-hour commutes on the Green Line, there are worse films to take a plunge with. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

THE IMITATION GAME ★★★ Director Morten Tyldum spends so much time setting up complex puzzles that he oversimplifies the life of his central enigma: Alan Turing, a British genius posthumously regarded as a father of the modern computer. Fortunately, Benedict Cumberbatch expertly plays the tortured intellect, who was enlisted to join "half a dozen crossword enthusiasts in a small village in the south of London" racing to crack the supposedly unbreakable Nazi codes of Germany's Enigma machine during World War II. It's Turing's hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle constructed by screenwriter Graham Moore, working from a biography that revealed more about the real Turing, including how he was fascinated by the scene in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs where the evil queen dips an apple into poison. Turing was sentenced for indecency in '52, and onscreen text informs us of his tragic suicide at the age of 41, a year after beginning government-mandated "chemical castration." It's a very conventional ending to a film about a complex, puzzling life. What we don't see is that Turing died of cyanide poisoning—a half-eaten apple beside him, foam coating his mouth, no prince to save him. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

INTO THE WOODS ★★1/2 Rob Marshall returns to the movie musical after five years, and although this adaptation of Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine's 1986 stage production avoids becoming the debacle that was Nine, he's still blocking the action as poorly as he did more than a decade ago with Chicago. But then, that film won six Oscars, including Best Picture, so someone likes what he's doing. And frankly, his latest is well-cast, with Meryl Streep headlining as the Witch and Johnny Depp as the Wolf in this mélange of Brothers Grimm fairy tales built around the characters of a baker (James Corden) and his barren wife (Emily Blunt). Streep's blue-haired sorceress bursts into their shop, offering to grant the couple a baby, if only they'll retrieve items belonging to Cinderella (Anna Kendrick), Little Red Riding Hood (Lilla Crawford), Rapunzel (Mackenzie Mauzy) and Jack (Daniel Huttlestone), he of the Beanstalk. Most of the dialogue is sung; if that isn't your thing, you'll be missing Chris Pine's dazzlingly hammy turn as Prince Charming, where he unleashes his inner Shatner in a way barely glimpsed in his Captain Kirk role during two Star Trek pictures. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jupiter Ascending ★ That this latest fantasy adventure from siblings Andy and Lana Wachowski is a disaster should come as little surprise. Originally slated to open in July, it was ostensibly delayed to give the visual effects artists another seven months to perfect their work. But no amount of tinkering could have fixed the Wachowskis' script, or the lack of chemistry between Mila Kunis and Channing Tatum. She's Jupiter Jones, a Russian cleaning woman in Chicago, and he's Caine, a part-canine hunter from space who skates in on anti-gravity boots to save her from death. You see, aliens are bent on killing her before she can claim her place as the reincarnation of a mythical space queen who doubled as the CEO of a corporation that raises and harvests societies throughout the cosmos as fuel for immortality. That's right: The movie's central conceit—that we're all just food for our overlords—is straight out of The Matrix, the Wachowskis' first big hit. Alas, it's been 16 years and two dreadful sequels since that picture, and after failing with adaptations of cartoons (Speed Racer) and novels (Cloud Atlas), they've hit rock bottom with this original, awful take on the young adult genre. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Most Violent Year ★★★1/2 It's difficult to watch writer/director J.C. Chandor's third impressive movie (after Margin Call and All Is Lost) without recalling The Godfather, although the violence isn't as overt as it was in Francis Ford Coppola's films, despite the threat established with Chandor's choice of title. A Most Violent Year also takes place in and around New York, but it's set during a different era than Coppola's mob masterpieces. Specifically, the winter of 1981—one of the city's most crime-ridden years. Oscar Isaac plays Abel Morales, an upwardly mobile immigrant who's trying to build a good life for his wife, Anna (Jessica Chastain), and their daughters by running a legitimate heating oil company in a corrupt industry. Chandor spends as much time focusing on the Morales' marriage as he does on Abel's troubled business dealings. Anna's father was a small-time hood, and as much as she's pressuring her biblically named husband to become a big-time one, he holds to his metaphorical guns—even as she resorts to packing a real one, creating more tension in a film rife with it. Isaac and Chastain are superb, as is Albert Brooks as Abel's lawyer. This is not to be missed. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Project Almanac ★★ Of all the things I could do, given the ability to travel through time, I'm not sure traveling to Lollapalooza would rank terribly high. But then, if given the money to make a movie about time travel, I wouldn't make it in the style of the "found footage" thrillers that have been a dime a dozen since The Blair Witch Project popularized the genre in 1999, either. Nevertheless, brilliant teenager David Raskin (Jonny Weston) does the former, hoping to win the heart of Jessie Pierce (Sofia Black-D'Elia), his high school crush, when he should probably focus on getting a scholarship to MIT. (You'd think building a time machine would be enough to guarantee tuition.) Along with his sister, Christina (Virginia Gardner), and best friends Quinn (Sam Lerner) and Adam (Allen Evangelista), they begin to adversely alter the present with each trip into the past. Tragedies pile up, with David taking it upon himself to try to set things straight. Director Dean Israelite does what he can with the shaky-cam format, but you wish he'd have simply traveled back himself and conceptualized a smarter film. But hey—Lollapalooza! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Selma ★★★ Ava DuVernay's film shares much in common with Steven Spielberg's Lincoln; both focus on the back-room political deals and maneuvering of their protagonists, as well as on these men's rallying public personas. But there's a very good reason her movie isn't called King: It's a historical chronicle about a movement, set during a riotous three-month period in 1965, when the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. led a peaceful campaign against violent opposition that culminated in an epic march in Alabama from Selma to Montgomery and coincided with President Lyndon B. Johnson's signing of the Voting Rights Act. DuVernay's intimate dramatization of the civil rights movement is enlivened by the remarkable central performance of David Oyelowo as King. The British actor brings the same humanity and frustration to his role that Daniel Day-Lewis brought to the embattled president in Lincoln, with just as much humor. Shame that fellow Brits Tom Wilkinson (as Johnson) and Tim Roth (as George Wallace) feel so utterly out of place in their roles. Nevertheless, DuVernay's achievement is a reminder of the road we still need to travel. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Taken 3 ★ Don't be taken by this cynical cash grab that trades on Liam Neeson's good name. Even he looks bored in his third time playing ex-covert operative Bryan Mills, a man whose "particular set of skills" find him trying to escape a plot that's a rehash of The Fugitive. Screenwriters Luc Besson and Robert Mark Kamen's brazen theft wouldn't be complete unless they had Bryan, framed for the murder of his ex-wife (Famke Janssen), escaping into the sewers with a dogged detective, Franck Dotzler (Forest Whitaker), hot on his trail. And lest you think Dotzler is the oddest-named person in this joyless exercise in PG-13 inaction, this hopefully final installment of the franchise that launched Neeson as a formidable action star at age 56 is once again directed by Olivier Megaton. The Frenchman (nee Olivier Fontana), a former graffiti artist, took his name from his birthday—the 20th anniversary of the A-bombing of Hiroshima—a choice that's about as culturally sensitive as this series and its potpourri of foreign terrorists taking aim at Bryan's family. Speaking of, 31-year-old Maggie Grace returns as Bryan's college-age daughter. That takes a special set of skills, too. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Two Days, One Night* (Deux Jours, Une Nuit) ★★★★ Belgian brothers Jean-Pierre and Luc Dardenne's newest masterpiece focuses on Sandra Bya (Marion Cotillard in an Oscar-nominated performance), a woman who has a single weekend to convince a majority of her 16 co-workers to save her job—by forgoing their 1,000 euro bonuses. The Dardennes typically feature nonprofessional actors and follow their protagonists from behind, but here, working for the first time with an international star in a lead role, they capitalize on Cotillard's deeply expressive face, downplaying her natural beauty and finding a fractured psyche within her eyes. In placing their unflinching gaze squarely on the face of a seasoned pro, the Dardennes have captured one of their most naturalistic performances yet. They also capture a harsh truth: Most of Bya's co-workers aren't selfish, but simply struggling to get by, like so many are. And we witness this, time and again, as the Dardennes are steadfast in showing us each of Bya's encounters with them. Not nearly as depressing as it sounds, the film reveals some of the best and worst of humanity, but it's the kindness and generosity that you'll remember—and the changes of heart that don't come frequently enough. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

GOLD DIGGER Jude Law hunts for treasure in Black Sea.

The Wedding Ringer ★1/2 In case you couldn't figure out that Doug Harris (Josh Gad) is a loser from the multiple old friends and childhood acquaintances who refuse to be his best man, his obese ass crashes through his glass office desk to remind you. Subtlety was not on the minds of co-writers Jay Lavender and Jeremy Garelick, who does double-duty as director. With less than two weeks until he marries the supposed girl of his dreams (Kaley Cuoco-Sweeting), Doug is introduced to Jimmy Callahan (Kevin Hart), owner and CEO of Best Man, Inc., a company that provides a flattering best man (i.e., Jimmy) for socially challenged men in need. Ah, but Doug requires something that's never been pulled off in the wedding ringer business: a "Golden Tux," or seven fake groomsmen (all idiots), with Jimmy pretending to be a combat-veteran priest by the name of Bic Mitchum. (That's right: Doug spontaneously came up with his best man's name while staring at items in his medicine cabinet, Keyser Söze.) That'll be $50,000, please! Or $12 at the box office—which you could spend on a funnier movie. American Sniper might have more laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Wild ★★★ Director Jean-Marc Vallée follows up last year's Dallas Buyers Club with this chronicle of a lost soul's 1,100-mile trek toward redemption and renewal, adapted from Cheryl Strayed's memoir by novelist Nick

Hornby, who makes her journey as internal as it is outdoorsy. Reese Witherspoon plays Strayed as a woman in way over her head as she sets off alone on the Pacific Crest Trail with way too much gear, little of it practical. When first we see her, Strayed's well into her hike, tearing off a toenail bloodied from boots that are too small. But the real suffering came before. We flash back through various episodes of her life, from dealing with an abusive father in her troubled childhood (where she's played by Bobbi Strayed Lindstrom, the real Strayed's daughter) to the better upbringing she escaped to with her mother, Bobbi (a terrific Laura Dern), before things became worse again. This isn't the America's Sweetheart persona you expect from Witherspoon. Whoring herself out for heroin in flashback and frantically licking dew off of her tent to survive in the wild, she gives one of her most stripped-down performances to date. (At Boston Common, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

TICKETS TO PARADISE

Hayley Kiyoko is no stranger to the spotlight. The singer/actress joined girl group the Stunners at the behest of '90s pop star Vitamin C seven years ago and has also appeared on a slew of hit teen TV shows. As for the L.A. native's 2015, well, it's already off to a running start. Later this year, she'll join Patricia Arquette and James Van Der Beek on CSI: Cyber and star in the live-action remake of '80s series Jem and the Holograms. Then add in her recently released EP This Side of Paradise, which, yes, was recorded in her parents' basement. But it seems like the 23-year-old is ready to leave the nest—and take center stage at the Middle East, where she'll perform her dreamy electropop on Feb. 15. / Sarah Hagman

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

WANDERING EYE Photographer Béla Kalman spent nearly half of his 55-year career on Newbury Street running Studio 350, but his eye traveled far. Born in Budapest, he escaped a labor camp during the Nazi occupation, only to have his photography studio nationalized by the Soviets after the war. So he made his way to the U.S., where he took portraits for Life and The New York Times magazine, eventually landing in Boston in 1960. But he continued to shoot abroad, traveling to Cambodia, the Caribbean and Europe, including France, as you'll see at Paris et Provence, an exhibit featuring his shots of Parisian streets, Provencal landscapes and landmarks like Versailles and Notre Dame. Make a trip to the French Cultural Center, where it's on view through March 2. / Sarah Hagman

BOARDWALK EMPIRE

It may come as no surprise to learn that Monopoly—a game capable of invoking repressed bloodlust in grandmas everywhere—has a controversial history. In The Monopolists: Obsession, Fury, and the Scandal Behind the World's Favorite Board Game, Mary Pilon exposes its origins, from its purported invention by feminist Lizzie Magie to the Parker Brothers' adapted (or stolen) version known today. Plus, the tome reveals some behind-the-board trivia, such as the fact that the real-life versions of Boardwalk and New York Avenue were home to America's earliest gay bars. Who knew Rich Uncle Pennybags was so progressive? Go directly to Harvard Book Store—do not pass Go, do not collect $200—when Pilon makes an appearance on Feb. 17. / Kyle Grace Mills

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeck-Boston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Mar-row Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

IN VINO VERITAS

Just in time to ruin everyone's New Year's resolutions, the 26th annual Boston Wine Festival kicked off with a Champagne reception hosted by chef Daniel Bruce at the Boston Harbor Hotel.

Seen sipping bubbly: trendsetting yummy mummy Cheryl Fenton, super-suave technocrat Elio Maggini, blond smoke show Jenny Johnson and her sidekick, Billy Costa, reporter Mike Macklin, Boston's answer to Grace Coddington, Jill Radsken, radio hottie Lauren Beckham Falcone, the debonair Ken Tutunjian, country squire David Jacobs and his shiksa wife, Gen Tracy, the smolderingly sexy Jan Saragoni, lovable film publicist Phyllis Mercurio, banking babe Stephanie Carrigg, the ever affable William Grote, pint-sized pistol Janet Wu (looking fabulous in a jacket she bought at a Hong Kong street market), and so on and so forth.

In addition to Champagne, waiters passed apps paired with superb wines, and the witty persiflage flowed to the point that it's hard to pinpoint the evening's most amusing remark. The contenders:

"We're all just one flu away from our goal weight."

"I think there should be a regift option on dating sites."

And finally, "Drink up! There are sober teenagers in Utah!"

THERE'S NO TIME LIKE THE PRESENT

Baseball and rock 'n' roll consummated their relationship yet again with the 15th annual Hot Stove Cool Music benefit for The Foundation to Be Named Later, held at the Paradise Rock Club.

The Improper was a proud sponsor of the evening, which began with a VIP reception and continued with a concert that raised the roof. Present and accounted for: baseball scribe and event founder Peter Gammons, TV stars Mike O'Malley and David Cross, Dot-bred rocker chick Kay Hanley, her ex-hottie Michael Eisenstein, music legend Al Kooper, chart buster Robin Lane, indie chick Juliana Hatfield, Buffalo Tom frontman Bill Janovitz, guitar god Will Dailey, the multitalented Eli Paperboy Reed, pixieish singer-songwriter Jen Trynin, ubiquitous do-gooders Lynne and Gary Smith, affable restaurateur Jim Solomon, the devilishly handsome Geoff Pardo, marketing guru Rob Sisti, blond balabusta Jen Schneider Ziskin, foundation head Allyce Najimy, its co-founders, former Red Sox GM Theo Epstein and his educator twin, Paul, and a set of life-sized light-up Santas signed by the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, which were part of the live auction.

All in all, it was a stellar evening, with great food, excellent music, plenty of laughs and beaucoup dinero raised for a worthwhile cause. The evening's funniest exchange, overheard by the bar: "I thought of a name for the foundation!" To which his friend replied, "Save it for later." ◆

IN MEMORIAM

I first encountered the artistry of Sidewalk Sam in the 1970s, outside places like the New England Aquarium, Faneuil Hall and the Museum of Fine Arts. His masterful and elaborate work— original designs and superb recreations of masterpieces— were rendered in chalk on the sidewalk. I found them all the more astonishing after I watched one deteriorate in the rain, ribbons of what looked like multicolored pollen running down a storm drain.

By the time I met him in the '90s, he was confined to a wheelchair because of a grisly accident in which he fell off the roof of his house. I'd never met someone who so personified the adage to always look on the bright side of life.

When I went to his house to interview him, it was a hot summer evening, and we sat on his porch, drinking more white wine than we should have. He told me that he'd seriously considered becoming a priest but that art was his true calling, as well as his salvation, his solace and his pulpit. We had a very deep conversation about our core beliefs, but I'm pretty sure I did all the talking, while he nodded enthusiastically and affirmed everything I said with a generosity of spirit reminiscent of Santa Claus.

His unswerving positivity seemed almost weird, but then again, recreating the Mona Lisa out of chalk, on a busy sidewalk, is somewhat odd. His art was unexpected, beautifully executed, often political and potent. But the real point was that, like life, it was ephemeral.

Rest in peace, Sidewalk, and thank you for teaching me that lesson as eloquently as anyone ever has.

A LITTLE FOOD FOR THOUGHT

A SHAMEFUL CONFESSION FROM my misspent youth: I was one of those insufferable picky eaters who sequestered the foods on her plate, policing the peas lest they dare fraternize with the carrots. Needless to say, I didn't develop much of a palate until adulthood and, especially, my first magazine job. Three weeks in, I was out to dinner with my new colleagues when the chef brought out a glistening raw bar spread, splaying the Atlantic's bounty across pristine pebbles of ice—and staying to watch us enjoy it. I was 24 and it was my first raw oyster, the gateway oyster, the precursor to uni and beef heart pastrami and sundry culinary adventures to come.

It's becoming easier for kids today to get a head start as gastronauts. For our cover story, Linh Tran Brincat chats with some local chefs who are making great dining destinations more welcoming places for pint-sized patrons. Elsewhere, Alexandra Cavallo surveys the state of the pop-up restaurant, and Jonathan Soroff interviews Emmy-winning sports reporter and current Cambridge Culinary student Jen Royle, who recently cooked for the likes of Anthony Bourdain and Nigella Lawson on The Taste. Meanwhile, Meghan Kavanaugh listens in on the kitchen soundtracks of some favorite local toques, while Sarah Hagman catches up with a food stylist who helps chefs get their creations ready for their close-ups. Oh, and Ezra Dyer decides to eat some creatine. Bon appetit.

FASHION PLATES

Edible Arrangements

Playing with food is just part of the job for Catrine Kelty. The culinary stylist explains, "It's like being an artist and food is your medium." Both food and art are familiar territory for Kelty, the daughter of a butcher and baker who studied filmmaking before getting into the business nearly 20 years ago.

Kelty works with photographers and art directors to translate a chef's vision onto the page. "They have an incredibly good eye and know how to present their dish in their restaurant," she says, "but the camera doesn't always see that." Armed with tweezers, cotton swabs, paintbrushes and a host of other tools, she offers another analogy: "We're kind of like makeup artists for the food." There's heavier equipment, too—blowtorches burn, heat guns melt and steamers lend a glistening effect. She might use oil and water to add moisture or beet juice to intensify color. Such natural ingredients (no shellac here) mean Kelty can style her cake and eat it too—once the job is done, the crew tastes about 95 percent of the treats.

"The result is glamorous," Kelty says of the final images, which have appeared in many regional and national magazines, from The Improper to Bon Appetit. "But the process is not." One of the biggest challenges is getting the food, be it out-of-season produce or melting ice cream, to cooperate. "You don't know when it's going to have a tantrum," Kelty says, comparing her medium to an unpredictable toddler. And after hours spent on set wedged between reflectors, tripods and cables, she may have to wait up to a year to see the finished product if it's a project like a cookbook. But it's worth it for images that make stomachs growl, which, Kelty says, is "what we aim for." / Sarah Hagman

HOW TO INSTAGRAM LIKE A FOOD STYLIST

LET THERE BE LIGHT: Find a spot in your home—it may not be the kitchen—or venture outside to get the best natural light.

CREATE A WORLD: Use items like cutting boards or dish towels to set up a background.

DRESS IT UP: Accessorize the dish as you would an outfit by adding utensils or other props.

SHINE AND DINE: A tip Kelty picked up from a friend: Reserve a table by the window while eating out.

SAY CHEESE: You don't need a filter to take food shots like a pro.

TURNIP THE BEAT

Too many cooks may spoil the broth, but for most chefs, you can never have too many beats. We tapped local chefs to find out what music keeps them (and their staff) grooving from brunch through dinner. / Meghan Kavanaugh

JAMIE BISSONNETTE

At Toro and Coppa, Bissonnette spins an eclectic mix of punk, metal, jazz and some indie jams to keep everyone motivated. "I'm an aging 37-year-old hardcore kid, and my cooks are young and into a lot of pop.... Fitz and the Tantrums is perfect for all of us."

MICHAEL SCELFO

Alden & Harlow's chef/owner says hip-hop and R&B (and even the occasional Nick Jonas tune) act as a "really functional and positive player" in his kitchen. But jammers beware. "If I see subpar work or disorganization in the kitchen, I generally pull the plug. Literally."

3. "Hold On" – SBTRKT
4. "I Don't Mind" – Usher
5. "Look ot Me Now" – Chris Brown

WILL GILSON

The crew at Puritan & Company goes old school with pop hits from the '80s that put everyone in a good mood, Gilson says, adding, "The tempo of the music helps us with rhythmic movements, and it gets our creativity going."

1. "Nothing's Gonno Stop Us Now" – Storship
2. "Seporote Woys" – Journey
3. "This Is How We Do It" – Montell Jordan
4. "Donger Zone" – Kenny Loggins

COLONIAL STYLE

A CAMBRIDGE EATERY AIMS TO ADD SOME HISTORICAL FLAVOR.

Loyal Nine
660 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-945-2576)
loyalninecambridge.com

WELCOME TO THE NEW TREND: the 18th century. Not only are we experiencing a ferocious winter spell that compares only to the Great Snow of 1717, but if the crew behind Cambridge restaurant Loyal Nine, set to open in an old liquor store in March, has anything to say about it, we'll all be dining like we did a few centuries ago. Well, minus a few things.

"We're looking to be inspired by that time period, with the flavors, ingredients and cooking techniques, without being inhibited too much by it. We're not going to be thickening all our sauces with flour because that's what was done," says chef/co-owner Marc Sheehan. "It's updated with modern food, and it's inspired by the time period, not an actual re-creation."

The menu focuses not solely on New England, but more generally on the East Coast—with an emphasis on the coast. There will be seafood like mackerel and bluefish, as well as many kinds of shellfish, including razor clams, oysters, crabs and shrimp.

"One of our goals with shellfish is to use them in different ways, whether they're in sauces, glazing vegetables or simply served on ice. Take different approaches than your standard warm bowl of mussels and broth," Sheehan says.

But fish-weary folks will find a few other options on the opening menu, such as the savory stuffer, which harks back to a favored 18th-century casserole of potatoes, onions and salt pork. Sheehan has kept the dish simple with the same three main ingredients, but reimagined it. The result is confit potatoes, sweated onions and salt pork that's been half-cured and ground with egg and cheese for added structure.

The 18th-century sensibility carries over to the bar program, with a focus on brandy and rum as well as a selection of dry ciders. Despite the fascination with colonial history—the restaurant name references a group of nine citizens who were revolutionaries in the 1760s—there will also be drinks favored long after the Sons of Liberty, like a mean dirty martini.

The backgrounds of the Loyal Nine owners (Sheehan, Daniel Myers, Rebecca Theris and David Beller) also have a modern bent. When they first met, Sheehan was working on the Brasstacks pop-up, while Myers and Theris were working on the Hand Taste Collective pop-up.

"Although the food was very different, you could taste some core overlaps in how we were approaching our concept. Responsibility and proximity, while keeping quality in mind, were always very important to us," Myers says. "What's most important is to commit to all these practices that involve handcraft."

That handmade touch carries over to the decor of the restaurant and adjoining coffee shop, which will serve coffee, sandwiches, salads and pastries during the day. Theris made every plate in the restaurant by hand, while Myers and his brother-in-law built all the wooden tables themselves. And customers will get a chance to see Sheehan and his kitchen crew add their own touch every day.

"You'll see a completely open kitchen," Myers says. "The only walls we built were to cover the restrooms. Other than that, we've built no walls, so we can show you what we're doing every step of the way."

FINDING TEMPO

A WALTHAM SPOT EMBRACES A TREND.

GLUTENOUS MINIMUS: Tempo might have the most gluten-free-friendly menu in Waltham.

AFTER 10 YEARS IN BUSINESS AND a major renovation, the biggest news about Tempo might simply be the Waltham restaurant's standing as one of the most celiac-friendly eateries in the area. Given the demand for gluten-free dining, there were two choices: "Either run from it or embrace it," says general manager Erin Barnicle. "We chose to embrace it."

Because chef/owner Nathan Sigel oversees an all-scratch kitchen, it's easy to determine if any ingredient adds gluten to a dish. Many who go gluten-free, Sigel says, are under the mistaken impression that they can't consume vinegar. But that's only because it's often thickened with flour. At Tempo, however, dressings and sauces are free of such taboo thickeners. Most of the menu—including pasta dishes—can be prepared to accommodate gluten-free diets. Best of all, there's a dedicated gluten-free fryer in the kitchen. A nightly special of fried Duxbury oysters boasts a housemade gluten-free batter that's as crisp and light as the real thing; they're served hot and juicy atop dabs of cherry pepper aioli. Elsewhere on the menu, seared Scottish salmon tops creamy potatoes, melted leeks, wild mushrooms, roasted tomatoes, wilted kale and a hint of white truffle oil, and a thick hanger steak, rubbed with coffee and mesquite, is anointed with bourbon cream. And desserts are hardly an afterthought: Pastry chef Jennifer Renaud's background includes a stint at L'Espalier. Her experience shines in a ricotta cheesecake with a nut crust and citrus caramel sauce.

CHANCE THESE MEATBALLS

WINTER IS MEATBALL SEASON. IF YOU'RE READY to look beyond the tomato sauce and spaghetti iteration, check out Global Meatballs by Salem author Adeline Myers. Although a majority of the recipes are meat-based, and most are fried, there are plenty of globally sourced alternatives. Consider red lentil and bulgur kufteh in lettuce leaves, Russian potato ball and milk soup and Caribbean fish and yucca dumplings with callaloo.

GRAPES FOR ANY PLATE

To my palate, the most flexible wines to enjoy with lunch, dinner or breakfast (I mean brunch!) are those that taste balanced with lively acidic flavors. That's why when ordering for a group in a restaurant, where everyone is eating something different, my all-purpose wine solution is crisp and tart with citric or sharp berry flavors. Two of these three recommendations fit that bill. The third is a mild "backdrop wine" that absorbs stronger food flavors the way that rice blends in behind assertive sauces. / Sandy Block

DOMAINE FOURNIER SAUVIGNON BLANC, LOIRE VALLEY, 2013 This well-priced country wine, produced by a renowned Sancerre estate, features a green herb, grapefruit-like aroma and piercing flavors. Finishing with a bite of stony minerality, it's magic with most any seafood preparation—raw or cooked—as well as green salads and any dish with goat cheese. $12, Bauer Wine & Spirits, Boston

CASTELLO DI NEIVE "CORTINI" PINOT NERO, LANGHE, 2012 You usually have to spend a lot for pinot noir; provided you're not looking for a fruit bomb, this one is a steal. Loaded with the scent of fresh cherries, mushrooms and earth, it's vibrant and mineral, with a dried fruit note and very moderate tannins. Quite versatile at the table, it's ideal with fish stews, salmon, pasta and tomato- or pesto-accented chicken dishes. Enjoy it a bit cooler (60 degrees, not 70). $21, Vintages, Belmont

LUCIEN ALBRECHT CUVEE BALTHAZAR PINOT BLANC, ALSACE, 2012 It's a mystery why this grape variety isn't more popular. What I love about pinot blanc: It's silky, soft and gentle, with a subtle spiciness that rarely clashes with food. This one has intriguing floral scents, a creamy texture and some understated pear-like fruit in the finish. It can serve as a mellow, refreshing aperitif or a low-key complement to a range of zesty and flavorful fish as well as vegetarian or white meat dishes. $13, D&L Liquors, Waltham

Good Eats: Believe in Meju

Bibim is where you go in Allston for Korean home cooking in a cozy dining room, but Meju, the Kim family's newly opened Davis Square restaurant, steps out with an urban vibe, cocktails and smaller shareable dishes like pajeon. The kitchen nails this crispy fried pancake, available with either scallions and potatoes or excellent homemade kimchi, the mess of fine-cut vegetables disrupting a rice flour batter that's lacy on the exterior but retains just enough glutinous chew within. They serve it ripping hot, which makes the pieces tricky to dunk in the sesame-soy dipping sauce—but oh-so satisfying. / Elizabeth Bomze

SNOW DAZE

DEAR T: Today, I waited almost a half-hour for a bus that is supposed to come every 5 minutes. It should not take 50 minutes to get from South Boston to the Back Bay. EVER. It is indeed true; you guys are doing a lousy job.

— A very unhappy member of your captive ridership

DEAR GOOD SAMARITAN: I made the mistake of loading pet supplies into my car while my wallet was in my jacket pocket at the Allston Petco before the first snowstorm, and I didn't even know it had popped out until later that day. Call me a Pollyanna, but I just had a feeling it was going to come back, so I kept an eye on my card balances and waited. In the meantime, you very sweetly dropped it off—with cards, IDs and all $7.05 in cash—at the Brighton police station. I wish I could've given you a reward. (A bag of dog food? Some kitty litter?) But I hope the universe will. Thank you so very, very much!

— Doggone relieved

TO JUAN FROM DPW: Shout out to you for lending a hand shoveling out. Here is a public employee who actually offered his services and helped me shovel when I was struggling. So grateful for his kindness.

— A Cambridge resident

DEAR WELL-HEELED: You walked into Starbucks in the Vertex building on Dec. 9. It was pouring, and you were wearing Louboutins. When I confirmed that you didn't wear them in the rain, you were impressed that I knew what they were. You are tall and hot—hope to see ya again!

— Designer detector

TO MY WINDSHIELD WIPERS: Why do you clean every part of the windshield except the part that is right in front of my eyes? It's like you're doing it on purpose just to piss me off. I can't wait to replace you.

PUMP YOU UP: The next generation of Reebok's iconic sneakers hits shelves in March.

Running on Air

Consider us pumped: After some sole-searching, Canton-based sportswear giant Reebok has decided to revamp its iconic Pump sneaker. The Pump was a hot ticket in the early '90s, when it was favored by sports stars like Dee Brown, Danny Ainge, Michael Chang and Dominique Wilkins (working his size 13). By simply pumping a front button, you could add and control a cushioned "lift" in the shoe's fit.

On March 10, not long after the shoe technology's 25th birthday, Reebok will introduce its ZPump Fusion ($110). Available for men and women in three color choices, this updated version of the Pump molds to your foot with just a push and a woosh of air. The kicker? When it's not inflated, the sneaker is structureless—almost flat. Put it on, pump it up, and the shoe clasps around your upper foot and heel for a fit so secure, the laces are just for show. "It conforms to your foot's shape to give you a locked-in, custom fit when you run," says Paul Litchfield, original inventor of the Pump and Reebok's head of advanced concepts. "You may need three pumps or you may need eight pumps. It's fully customizable."

It's also remarkably simple. Forgoing the 40-plus parts that make up many running shoes, the ZPump Fusion only has three main elements—the air cage, a comfy sleeve that stretches around your foot and an outsole inspired by Z-rated tires, which keep high-performing sports cars stable above 149 mph. You probably don't run quite that fast, but it's nice to know you'd be prepared if you could. / Cheryl Fenton

YOUNG AT ART: Find out more about Autumn's Boston show at parkwestgallery.com.

STROKES OF GENIUS

Thirteen-year-old Autumn de Forest has sold millions of dollars' worth of her artwork since she started painting at age 5. We chatted with the talented teenager, who visits Boston on Feb. 27 for a presentation and auction of her work at the Ritz-Carlton—and, she hopes, a trip to the ICA. / Sarah Hagman

HOW DID YOU START PAINTING? One day I stepped out into the garage and saw my father staining some wood, and I asked him if I could mess around. I wasn't very concerned with making it into this huge, beautiful masterpiece. I was just having fun and expressing myself. My father turned around, and he was really surprised. And I didn't know quite what he was surprised about. He said it looked like a Rothko. I had no idea what such a thing was then, but I sure do now.

IF YOU COULD MEET ANY ARTIST, WHO WOULD IT BE? Oh, wow. I have so many favorite artists. Van Gogh, Bob Dylan—he did some artwork that I love—Georgia O'Keeffe, Salvador Dali, Grant Wood, Chuck Close, Picasso, Andy Warhol, Roy Lichtenstein, Willem de Kooning. It just goes on and on. It's different for each style of painting, and I love each one because they can be so different but so beautiful at the same time.

WHAT DO YOU ENJOY BESIDES PAINTING? Of course painting is my career and my life, but I love archery and playing with my standard poodle. I love reading; I just finished The Metamorphosis. I love being able to go into another world, and sometimes that can inspire me for another painting.

HOW DO YOU THINK ART CAN MAKE THE WORLD A BETTER PLACE? I personally think there are many, many ways that art can make this world a better place. For example, inspiring people. Quite honestly, I don't paint much more than some kids play video games. Just taking 30 minutes to set that down and be creative.... Don't worry about how good you are; focus on how much you love it.

FEAR IN THE FROZEN NORTH

THE LOCAL AUTHOR OF BUSY MONSTERS RETURNS WITH A THRILLER SET IN THE ALASKAN WINTER.

Hold the Dark* by William Giraldi
Published by Liveright, 208 pages, $25

WOLVES, IN THIS BOOK, ARE symbolic of both the treacherous and the sacred. Medora has lost her 6-year-old son, Bailey, seemingly to a wolf in Alaska. So she hires Core, a man who studies and reveres these animals, to help find him. But Bailey hasn't been dragged to the wolves' home in the hills: Core discovers the murdered boy in his mother's cellar.

Soon Bailey's father, Vernon, comes home from war, searching for the now missing Medora and boiling with vengeance. Meanwhile, local characters anoint themselves with wolf oils and wear masks as talismans, both to protect themselves and to threaten others. There's an otherworldly flavor to the story, as in the case of two oddball characters, a vagrant and a hag, who delivered ominous warnings to Medora during her pregnancy. Even before birth, her boy had a dark cloud hanging over his head.

In this near-mythic landscape, people and wolves appear equally dangerous. Friends become enemies. Killings occur in scene after scene. In the dark tundra of the tale, Giraldi's prose is thick with poetic mystery. The ultimate hidden secret in this book dazzles when finally revealed. And what comes of it almost seems like a sweet dream after the rampages of the characters.

FROM PAGE 104: The hunter stood in the wide glow of the blaze: pallets, crates, boxes, pieces of tree. Donned wholly in gray wolf pelt, with white man's skin and untrimmed hair still dark despite his age, he seemed a make-believe shaman. The wolf's tail was still attached to his guise, its fanged head pulled low over his own for a hood. ◆

PDX-RATED

A WEEKEND OF DECADENT DELIGHTS AWAITS YOU IN OREGON'S LARGEST CITY.

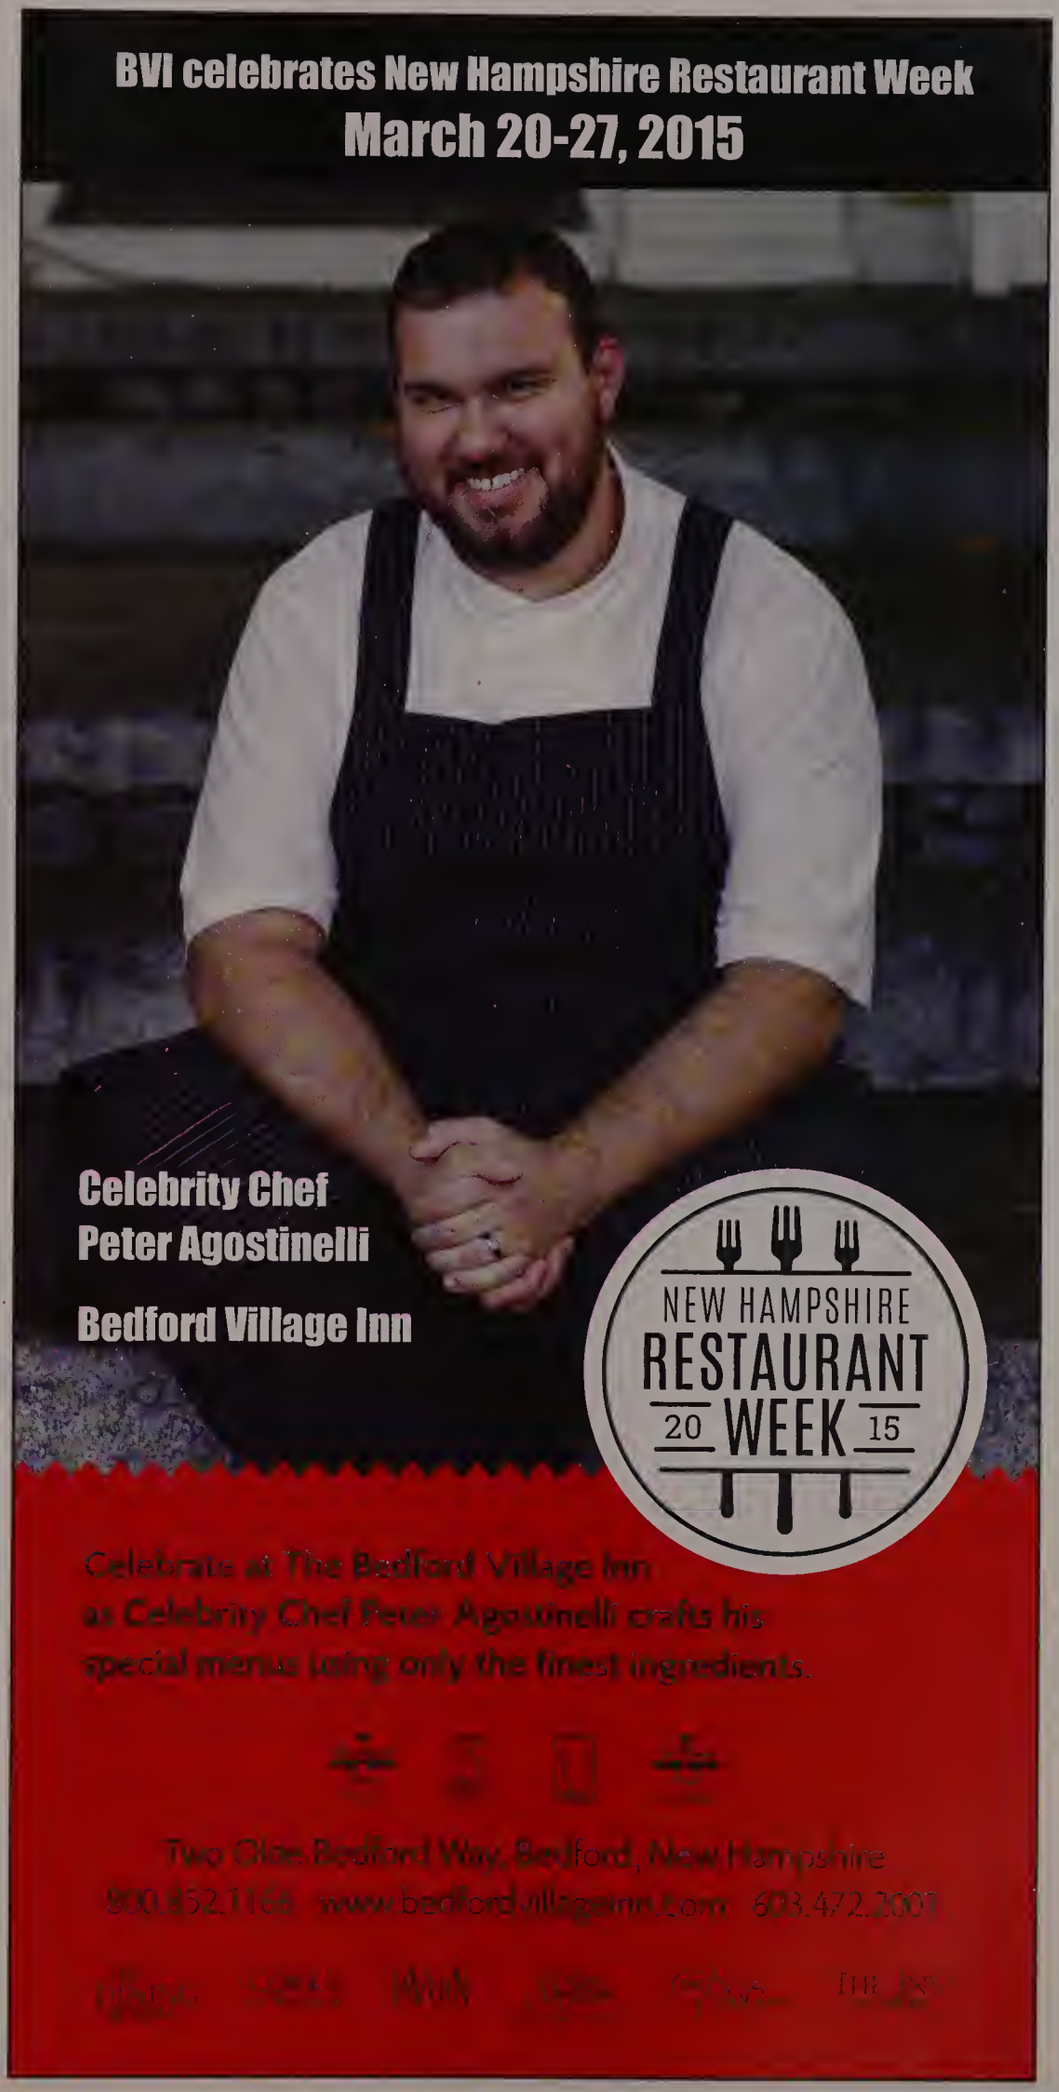
THERE ARE MANY VALID REASONS TO VISIT Oregon, but this is not an account of the piney coast, not a guide to connecting to the natural world. This is a weekend bender for advanced deviants, an urban adventure demanding total allegiance to indulgence. To partake of Portland's quirky traditions, to imbibe by the customs of its citizens, to flirt with excess without becoming excessive: This is the oath by which we stand, until we can stand no more.

But first, we must orient ourselves. PDX splits neatly into four quadrants, using the Willamette River and Burnside Bridge as its vertical and horizontal axes, respectively. The southwestern quarter holds downtown—and your home base. The Ace Hotel introduces but one problem: You won't want to leave its cool comfort. The boutique lodgings recall childhood fort dreams materialized and matured, offering luxury in beautifully simple details: ample natural woods, pillows that swallow your head, hooded terrycloth robes and, for the ladies or forward-thinking men, a black washcloth to clean those heavily lined eyes. Daily European-style breakfasts tempt with house-pickled vegetables, cured meats and cheeses, fluffy breads and spreads, shards of bitter dark chocolate and French-pressed coffee from revered local roaster Stumptown.

You might people-watch in the Ace's inviting communal workspaces, but don't linger too long. It's time for a pre-binge cleanse at Prasad, three blocks from base camp—for the surest palate is a clean one. At first glance, it looks like an unassuming cafe, but the medicinal properties therein cannot be underestimated. Order a coconut cider, a frothy, spiced concoction of fresh apple-ginger juice steamed with coconut milk that both warms and tempers. Then raise your fork to the chipotle chili bowl, crisp with a quinoa bite that cuts smoky chili, greens and avocado smothered in peppery cream sauces. Cap it with your first shot of the trip: two ounces of ginger-lemon juice spiked with cayenne and echinacea, chased with an apple slice.

Use the early afternoon to get a lay of the land and its artisanal craftings. Across from the Ace, the Union

Way hallway leads to Danner, Portland's premier purveyor of hide. The rugged footwear shop even smells like the great outdoors, thanks to Danner's living wall, stacked floor to ceiling with succulents and grass. You might recognize the boots on display as those worn by Reese Witherspoon in her recent turn in Wild, based on the memoir by Portland local Cheryl Strayed, who trekked 1,100 miles along the Pacific Crest Trail.



Your trek to the Dump Truck food cart is only a few blocks. Stock up on chewy, delicate dumplings with unique fillings and sauces, all served over a tangy slaw, and carry them to Blue Star, where it takes 18 hours to turn brioche dough into donuts with high-brow twists, like a classic glaze spiked with horchata. Bring your goods around the corner to Bailey's Taproom and spread them across the bar while sipping your choice of more than 20 craft brews. The options rotate frequently but heavily feature Oregon taps (the Boneyard IPA is a must if available). Bailey's also offers 4- to 10-ounce pours of everything for around $3, which means you can sample all the local purveyors—or fall off your stool trying.

Take a beer nap back at the Ace and freshen up before heading out for the night. To lay a solid base buzz, visit the Multnomah Whisk(e)y Library and sit among more than 1,600 brown spirits, which line the ceiling-high shelves so vastly that bartenders use a classic wheel ladder to retrieve the ordered bottles. There's no pressure to know your browns, so unless you do, don't mess with the book list—opt instead for the Old-Fashioned. Anyone can make the classic cocktail, but only a master can make it worth ordering at a bar known for its whiskey selection. Order at least two in preparation for your next destination.

Strip clubs—dozens of them—dot the streets of Portland, which boasts more skin parlors per capita than any other U.S. city. But these aren't all just divey, dark holes. In Portland's outskirts, there's the all-vegan, all-nude Casa Diablo, where they serve surprisingly enjoyable plant-based grub—so long as you can get past eating a burrito just feet away from wobbly bits of bare flesh and the occasional glimmer of a sparkle-ended butt plug. The downside: The ATM and bar distribute only $2 bills, and recent allegations suggest that the ownership may hold animals in higher regard than its dancers. Closer to downtown, options for a tamer experience abound, including Portland's oldest topless joint, Mary's Club, where rocker Courtney Love highlights the alumni list.

Wakey, wakey, hungover and cranky! But not for long. Skip the Ace breakfast today in favor of Juniors, a locals' secret just across the river. Here, it's all about the strong coffee (keep it comin'!) and the migas: Heat from jalapenos, green chilies and chorizo stops your hangover cold, while tortilla chips soak up scrambled eggs or savory tofu, zesty salsa, creamy cotija and sour cream. Add spinach to round out the dish with a velvety bite, and a pint-sized bloody mary to lull you into a relaxed stupor all the way to the airport. ◆

CHAINED HEAT

BARCELONA SOUTH END DRAWS CROWDS WITH A VERSATILE MENU.

BARCELONA SOUTH END
525 Tremont St., Boston
barcelonawinebar.com

When Connecticut-based chain Barcelona chose the South End for its 10th location, locals reacted with bemusement. "Who thinks we need a third Spanish place? We've got Toro and Estragon, two beloved indies with loyal followings." The C-word didn't help. To food geeks, chains evoke a triumph of uniformity and scale economies over soul and idiosyncrasy, MBAs over cooks. At least this Barcelona puts familiar local names on the masthead, like executive chef Steven Brand, a veteran of the beloved, bygone UpStairs on the Square. And it's certainly gratifying to see a fresh, attractive design in the former home of the long-moribund Sibling Rivalry, the dining rooms nicely opened up, making for a noisy, lively atmosphere dominated by a central U-shaped bar in front of an open kitchen.

That throbbing, frequently packed bar features a list of 10 sherries ($4-$18/glass) and 40 wines ($6-$14/glass). Customers nibble on tapeo classics like Spanish olives ($3.50), potato tortilla ($4.50) with chive sour cream, boquerones ($6.50), blistered shishito peppers ($7.50) and any of a dozen varieties of imported cold cuts and housemade charcuterie, plus 15 cheeses ($6.50 each, $17.50 for three). A short list of respectable craft cocktails ($8.50-$12) includes the Enabler ($12), like a mojito punched up with Green Chartreuse and habanero shrub. The beer list includes four drafts and two dozen options in cans and bottles (most $5-$7), and there are five variations on housemade sangria ($6.50-$9/glass). In its role as a swank, high-volume watering hole, Barcelona has already found a heady groove.

But Barcelona has greater culinary ambitions, boasting one of the longer Spanish menus in town, with many small plates too generous to be considered tapas, a welcome variety of vegetable dishes, a few substantial entrees, and a handful of paellas and mixed grills for two or more diners. Paper-thin slices of jamón mangalica ($11 small, $22 large), a Hungarian pig cured in Spain in the style of jamón ibérico, is a sweet, delicate knockout of a ham, hand-carved by the chef tableside right of the hoofed haunch. Items cooked simply on a flattop impress with their clean, vivid flavors, as in prawns a la plancha ($9.50), two huge, bright-pink specimens in their full exoskeletal glory. Ask for extra napkins, put down your knife and fork, and shell these two fat beauties with your hands; they hardly need the accompanying red chimichurri. Pulpo gallego ($9.50) is another nicely cooked seafood dish, albeit less work, its tender octopus tentacles sliced into disks alongside fingerling potatoes, given a brick-red tone and hint of smoke with a dusting of pimentón. Squid-ink fideos ($14) offers a beautiful, substantial variant on paella, subbing chopped, stranded fidelini pasta for short-grained rice, loaded with squid and the rich, briny accent of squid ink, with creamy aioli to stir in.

Grilled morcilla ($7.50) with new potatoes and saffron offers a few pretty, carmine, iron-tangy dollops of blood pudding. Migas ($6.50), croutons mixed with bits of chorizo and topped with a fried egg, suffers from too free a pour of oil. Vegetable dishes range from a lovely winter chopped salad ($9.50) with quinoa, pomegranate seeds and chunks of chestnut, to crudites-like raw, thin-sliced sweet carrots ($6.50) in ginger vinaigrette, to a spicy eggplant caponata ($5.50) that lacks fire but has a strange, not-unpleasant sweetness. Of several somewhat bland root-vegetable preparations, Macomber turnips ($6.50) with rosemary, garlic and jamón registers the strongest. More memorable is a casuela (terra cotta crock) of spinach, chickpeas and roasted garlic ($6.50) with a gentle Moorish accent of cumin.

Brand occasionally gets to wander afield of Spanish tradition to show off his haute-French chops, as in a gorgeously done hunk of skin-on crispy pork belly ($9.50) with a brightly acidic tomatillo sauce, like a fine-dining take on chicharrónes; grilled quail ($7.50) with bacon, Brussels sprouts and kale, a single spatchcocked, perfectly cooked little bird; and an exquisite version of spiced veal cheek ($13.50) on pureed celery root with bits of green apple and lime—a subtle, rich braise topped with a beautiful pan sauce. Grilled pluma ibérica ($16.50), a tender, well-marbled pork loin cut, is alarmingly ruby-rare in the center, but this proves a respectful, delicious choice when the source is acorn-fed Spanish black pig. From a short dessert list, the most traditional entry is the best: flan Catalan ($6) in a thin caramel sauce.

Service both at the bar and in the dining room reflects a level of hustle and polish that is surely a requisite of the long menu and an advantage of a corporate training operation. Given the neighborhood context, Barcelona Store No. 10 would be easy to approach with skepticism. A menu and space this big often lead to dilution, to a something-for-everyone versatility that's at odds with both tradition and innovation. With any luck, Barcelona's local management will keep finding and highlighting the islands of individual heart, originality and excellence peeking out from behind its efficient, noisy, occasionally overgroomed facade. Out here in the neighborhoods, that's what keeps the locals coming back. ◆

Q: I AM USING MOISTURIZER, BUT MY SKIN STILL FEELS TIGHT AND DRY.

A: This time of year our skin sometimes needs an extra boost of hydration. My favorite winter treatment is hydrasonic skin therapy. This relaxing one hour treatment plumps up your skin by infusing it with nourishing serums. It is a great treatment for every type of skin.

Gentle ultrasonic sound wave action, coupled with water, causes pores to open up and allows the cells to absorb the water as it is applied. In addition, multiple serums, such as hyaluronic acid, peptides, antioxidants, and enzymes are layered on during the treatment. The ultrasonic sounds waves allow deeper penetration of these nutrients. The serums nourish and protect your skin, making it more resilient to the perils of winter.

Hydrasonic skin therapy helps to restore needed moisture, prevents dryness, and leaves your skin feeling soft and healthy.

FIFTY SHADES OF GREY* ★½

Starring Dakota Johnson, Jamie Dornan, Eloise Mumford, Victor Rasuk, Luke Grimes, Max Martini, Jennifer Ehle and Marcia Gay Harden. Written by Kelly Marcel, based on the novel by E.L. James. Directed by Sam Taylor-Johnson. At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, West Newton and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

BLACK AND WHITE

THERE ARE FEW SHADES OF NUANCE TO THIS BORING BDSM FANTASY.

THE HOTLY ANTICIPATED ADAPTATION OF Fifty Shades of Grey may have burned up the box office during Valentine's Day weekend, but this movie is just as cold as the sub-zero temperatures we've been facing this long, snowy winter.

Take the movie's lead, Dakota Johnson. She's not only the offspring of Don Johnson and Melanie Griffith, but the granddaughter of Tippi Hedren, an actress who knew a thing or two about looking sexy while being menaced. Johnson spends nearly a fifth of this film's running time without clothing, and although her nubile form is certainly admired by director Sam Taylor-Johnson's camera, down to the light hair that's glimpsed on her legs (a nice touch that no male director would have allowed), nudity hasn't been this unerotic since Demi Moore shed her clothes as a single mother/stripper in 1996's Striptease.

But Johnson's virginal Anastasia Steele is no trailer park dweller. We're aware that Ana is better than that because she makes a point of mentioning her 4.0 GPA to her under-the-weather college roommate Kate (Eloise Mumford) before filling in for the aspiring journalist by interviewing Christian Grey (Jamie Dornan), the commencement speaker at the girls' upcoming graduation.

But before she can enter the offices of Grey Enterprises Holdings, Inc., the dowdily dressed Ana trips. Lying on the ground, she looks up, her eyes widening as she gets her first glimpse of Christian, 27-year-old billionaire. During their subsequent chat, she asks him what he does outside of his busy work schedule. His cryptic answer? "Physical pursuits."

Naturally, it's not long before Christian shows up at her part-time job as a clerk in a hardware store, where he's come looking for rope, tape and cable ties. Ana wonders aloud if he's a serial killer. If only. Although Dornan is best known for his role as a serial killer who leaves a collection of corpses around Belfast in the BBC series The Fall, he's the real stiff here.

Taking her out for coffee after, Christian asks Ana if she's a romantic. "I'm an incurable one," she answers. "I have to be. I'm an English major." After he finishes interviewing her, he concludes, "I'm not the man for you," and it's hard to argue with him, since Dornan and Johnson's onscreen chemistry is practically nonexistent.

Nudity hasn't been this unerotic since Demi Moore shed her clothes as a single mother/stripper in 1996's Striptease.

Nevertheless, Johnson has comic chops—though this film isn't as hilarious as I'd hoped for, so those chops are fairly wasted. Ana gets a bit wasted herself, celebrating her impending graduation in a bar with friends and drunk-dialing Christian—a scene that proves that this story was cobbled together by a 51-year-old. After all, what college-aged girl would be caught dead phoning anyone these days? It's a texting culture, and author E.L. James would know this if she were interested in capturing believable human interactions, rather than presenting a dominant/submissive relationship that would make actual BDSM practitioners turn red—not from a good spanking, but from embarrassment.

Even though he lives in Seattle, Christian somehow locates the bar in Vancouver, Washington, arriving just in time to save Ana from the unwanted advances of her friend José (Victor Rasuk), a barely seen stand-in for Twilight's third-wheel werewolf.

Confused? Don't be. James' trilogy of books started out as Twilight fan-fiction, back when she was going by the online nom de plume "Snowqueen's Icedragon." And her writing sits at exactly the level you'd expect from such a pen name.

As a film, though, Fifty Shades of Grey isn't only a pale imitation of that other trilogy based on best-selling books; it also can't hold any candle wax to a movie like Paul Verhoeven's Showgirls—another sexual romp, now celebrating its 20th anniversary. Aside from a cheeky contract negotiation scene that finds the two leads seated at opposite ends of a conference table as they discuss taboo terms like "anal fisting," there's nothing in Taylor-Johnson's picture that approaches the glorious level of camp like the hot tub-set thrash-fucking in Verhoeven's trash-cinema classic.

Back at the bar, Ana thanks Christian's chivalry with barf on his thousand-dollar shoes. Passing out in his arms, she awakes in his bed the next morning, nearly naked, wondering why she's there.

"Because I'm incapable of leaving you alone," he says, standing in a bedroom that's bigger than most people's entire homes.

"So don't," responds the clearly smitten virgin.

"I don't do romance," says the man with mysterious burn marks on his chiseled abs. "My tastes are very...singular."

They're also remarkably tepid. After seducing her with rides in his helicopter and a glider stolen wholesale from the 1968 and 1999 versions of The Thomas Crown Affair, he eventually brings Ana to his playroom, locked away in his manse and filled with a vast assortment of whips, chains, handcuffs and those hardware store purchases.

"You're a sadist?" Ana asks, and the actress can barely keep a straight face—which is preferable to the stern, constipated-looking expression that Dornan wears throughout. "I'm a dominant," he tells her. "If you please me, I'll reward you. If not, I'll punish you."

Nice (but unsmiling) guy that he is, Christian also lets her know that she's "free to leave at any time." If only viewers had that option. With film adaptations of James' second and third volumes—Fifty Shades Darker and Fifty Shades Freed—already announced, Christian Grey will be punishing audiences for a long time to come. ◆

BURST OF COLORS

DRUMMER TAPS INDIAN ROOTS FOR MULTICULTURAL CELEBRATION.

SUNNY JAIN REMEMBERS WHEN HE WAS 5 years old and captivated by a brass band at an uncle's wedding in India. That moment planted the seed for what would become his percussion and horns-driven ensemble Red Baraat, named after the term for a groom's wedding processional.

"I wanted to aim for this idea of an Indian brass band, but I wasn't looking to just be that, because that's not who I am," says Jain, who launched the Brooklyn-based group in 2008 after several years as a jazz drummer. "I've never been someone who wants to replicate something that already exists. It's about learning the tradition and the culture and the vocabulary, then trying to assimilate that into my expression."

He balances all of that in the buoyant churn of Red Baraat, echoing Indian bhangra as well as jazz, funk, hip-hop, go-go and New Orleans street brass. For its March 6 date at the Sinclair, the group extends that vision with the Boston debut of its Festival of Colors, a celebration of the Hindu holiday of Holi that showcases "the creative South Asian diaspora in America," Jain says. Between sets by Red Baraat and eclectic opener Rupa & the April Fishes, director Prashant Bhargava will screen his 35-minute film Radhe Radhe: Rites of Holi. It's a glimpse into that frenetic spring celebration in India and a nod to the centennial of Stravinsky's Rite of Spring, with a score by pianist/composer Vijay Iyer. The film depicts people throwing colored powders at each other in the street, though Jain says that Holi custom won't be allowed inside the club.

"It's about learning the tradition and the culture and the vocabulary, then trying to assimilate that into my expression."

Growing up in Rochester, N.Y., Jain was steeped in both Indian culture and assimilation, the youngest child of immigrants who practiced the religion of Jainism. "I was literally sitting in the middle of the kitchen floor, playing with my blocks while my mom was singing and cooking and playing Jain bhajans on cassette tapes," he says. "Dad had a reel-to-reel player and was playing classic Bollywood songs from the '50s to the '70s, amazing melodies that I started revisiting in college."

From his two siblings, the aspiring drummer absorbed Motown, Top 40 and classic rock, particularly the prog-rock of Genesis, Rush and Yes in his brother's record collection. Jain studied bebop as a teenager, leading to a jazz career that included his own collective as well as work with pianist Marc Cary (a D.C. native who introduced him to go-go) and drummer Kenny Wollesen's Himalayas. That marching band inspired him to pursue participatory music, Jain says. "You might as well be in a practice room if you're not going to have a rapport with an audience."

Jain then began to focus on the dhol, a barrel-shaped drum strung over the shoulder and briskly batted with sticks at each end, which let him take a front-and-center role with Red Baraat. "It's a tremendously powerful instrument," he says, "not just volume-wise, but timbre-wise."

At first, the drummer/composer says, "I wanted to transition into pure acoustic instruments, with just drums and horns, and the element of being able to be mobile was definitely intriguing as well." He sought musicians with experience beyond jazz. Sousaphone player John Altieri came from a classical background. Trumpeter Sonny Singh had played ska and rock. Members eventually began to sing and rap as well.

Red Baraat evolves further—sonically and thematically—on its month-old latest album, Gaadi of Truth, whose title translates to "journey of truth." "It's about dialogue, learning about one's self and learning about others," Jain says of the pluralism-minded album, which expands its musical references with both Indian and electronic touches, even closing with remixes by producer Karsh Kale and orchestral folk-pop group Lost in the Trees. Altieri experimented with synth-based pedals on tour with David Byrne and St. Vincent, and he brought that back to Red Baraat. Jain also introduced effects to the sound of his dhol, and he added a guitarist to Red Baraat on record and, now, on the road.

"It's a living, breathing organism, so it can't stay constant," Jain says of his band. "It needs to always travel and move and shift into whatever creative territory that may be." ◆

BUYING BULK

EXPLORING THE MASSIVE PROS AND CONS OF CREATINE.

IF THERE'S ONE GUARANTEE IN LIFE, IT'S THAT 20 or 30 years from now some commonplace product or activity will be viewed as a horrible plague upon mankind. When I was growing up, kids could roam around the car unbelted while Dad swigged a Schlitz on his way to the auto parts store to get some asbestos brake pads. When you got home, you'd chew the lead paint off a windowsill and then go outside to get a sunburn to make you forget about your concussion. At Logan, there's a retirement-planning billboard that says something like "When this airport was built, the average life expectancy was 56." I'm surprised it was that long. When they broke ground on Logan, there were still people around who'd pounded Coca-Cola with actual cocaine in it.

Which brings me, naturally, to creatine. Back in college I heard about this new nutritional supplement that was posited as kinda-sorta like steroids, but legal and without the side effects of bacne, 'roid rage and testicular shrinkage. I tried it for a couple of weeks, and it worked even better than advertised. In fact, it worked so well that I stopped taking it, because I figured there had to be a catch. It was too easy. This stuff was definitely going to cause people to grow steel-wool unibrows or suddenly poop out their spleens.

Now, 15 years later, I still haven't seen any deformed creatine mutants dragging themselves around Gold's by their prehensile tails. So I decide to give it another shot. I go to Rite Aid, pick out a big jar of GNC creatine powder and start swigging a couple of teaspoons four times a day. This is called the "loading" phase, bro. Scientifically speaking, it's when you get your muscles wicked full of creatine so you can lift wicked hard and really fill out that Lululemon shirt your wife got you.

I'll admit that I questioned my own motivations for this experiment. I am, after all, a writer, and muscle mass is not often relevant to my profession. It's not like I need to bulk up in case some rival keyboard jockeys challenge me to a high-stakes Over the Top-style arm-wrestling competition in the back of J.J. Foley's. That hardly ever happens anymore. But look, my wife has been watching the new Magic Mike trailer, OK? Like, more than once. I need to get to the gym.

There are many consumer items that I'm sure will turn out to be the next asbestos or fen-phen: nonstick pans, cellphones, the gallon of flame retardant in your living-room sofa. But creatine? Come on. It's been scrutinized harder than Pete Carroll's play-calling strategy. You know what the maximum FDA-allowable percentage is for salmonella-tainted chicken in any given package of thighs? One hundred percent. I'm not sure where I was going with that, but that's pretty gross.

So anyway, a decade and a half after I was last a cretin—I'm sorry—a creatine user, I can say it works as well as it ever did. I come home from the gym and tell Heather to feel my muscles, just like our 4-year-old does after he eats his dinner. The difference? His muscles are scrawny while mine are... are... sorry, I almost passed out there.

You see, it turns out there's something called "creatine fog," which I'm definitely experiencing. It's a kind of lightheadedness, like a head rush that sneaks up on you now and then. I read about it on bodybuilding forums, because once you become a person who buys GNC supplements, it's only a short step to the Juiced Muscle board and arguing the virtues of MusclePharm Combat Powder with a guy named RoidDog69. The kind of guys who educate you about creatine fog are the kind of guys who don't use elliptical machines—they throw them at each other while 'roid-raging.

This stuff was definitely going to cause people to grow steel-wool unibrows or suddenly poop out their spleens.

Anyway, now I face another decision. Do I keep taking this stuff and see what happens? Or do I assume the worst, dump the rest down the toilet and expect to receive a check for $2.53 from a massive class-action lawsuit in 2024?

On one hand, I feel like I might be ingesting a neurological disruptor. On the other, I've had some pretty good workouts. And vanity is a harsh mistress. Once she's got you, she doesn't want to let go. That's why I still shell out for Propecia even though nobody knows the long-term effects of that. It's not even like I have good hair. I'm just trying to hang in there until I can go to the stem cell barbershop and say, "I think today I'll have the Jared Leto."

So I think I'm gonna keep at it. I mean, after just a couple of weeks, I can already do 12 pull-ups—15 if I use my tail. ◆

GOING NUTTY

SOUND ADVICE ON HOST GIFTS, LOVE TRIANGLES AND NOVEL DEVELOPMENTS.

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe number-one bestseller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

Every time my husband and I are invited to dinner at people's houses, we bring a gift. We used to gift a bottle of wine. Who doesn't appreciate wine, right? Well, as friends have gotten a little older, many of them began getting into wine and became real snobs about it. We don't really care about being snobs. But we've gotten paranoid about giving anything that people will scoff at. Any suggestions? Sure. I actually have the same insecurity. My sister is in the wine business, so I trust in her taste and leave the wine selections for holiday dinners to her. But I never would presume to bring friends wine as a house gift. Don't give 'em any ammunition to criticize. Paranoia can even affect the advice giver. So I suggest you do what I do and bring something almost everyone loves: pistachios. It's something different, packaged in a lovely way. And if you drop the bag on the way to dinner, it won't break. I've been using Oh! Nuts (ohnuts.com), based in Queens, New York. You can easily search all kinds of nuts and other treats. Cheap and useful, what a concept.

My best friend has been in love with Bill for years, but he has shown no interest in her, other than going out with her in our group, as a friend. The other night he came on to me, and since then he has emailed me constantly with romantic and somewhat steamy messages. I haven't told my friends about this. I don't know what to do. I don't want to be disloyal, but I have to say I'm attracted to him. Should I cross him off my list to keep my friendship, or give the relationship a try and risk losing my best friend? This problem has probably been re-enacted millions of times over history. It's the stuff of novels and movies and TV shows. The forbidden fruit is the sweetest, and that may explain part of your attraction to Bill. I would set my priorities here. In my opinion, your friendship is much more important than a fling with Bill. Even if you're really selfish, you'll be better served by holding onto a relationship with a friend; a friendship can sustain you in tough times for many years. Unless you really think that you will go off into the sunset with Bill, hands off. You can find ways to be "hands on" with a lot of other people.

I'm dating a novelist (or at least that's what he wants to be). He gives me his stuff to read, and he writes really well. My problem is that some of his characters really scare me. And some seem to take an incredibly dim view of women. Am I getting into something that ultimately might break my heart? The answer to your question is both yes and no. Readers often assume the words of a novel reflect the actual opinions of the author. This impression can be completely false. The novelist is trying to describe and project his character's point of view, which may have nothing to do with his own. A good writer can write convincingly about ax murderers and baby kidnappers and foot fetishists without being any of the above. Does Stephen King terrify his family and everyone he meets? Does J.K. Rowling wear a pointy hat and a wizard's robe? Did Robert Louis Stevenson have a dark side like Dr. Jekyll? Well, you get the picture.

That being said, I really believe that people who are truly creative are not the safest bets for a long-term relationship. If they're really good and devoted to their art, there's often too much selfishness involved. But don't be frightened away by the characters your boyfriend creates. Could he eventually break your heart? Sure. But will he take it out of your body and eat it? Probably not.

My beautiful, sweet, loving nephew has unfortunately gotten into drugs. He has been to rehab several times, and nothing seems to work. He has turned to stealing and God knows what to feed his habit, and my sister and her husband cannot help him anymore. I recently announced my engagement and want to have an engagement party at my house. My sister is furious with me because I don't want to invite him. I just don't feel I can trust him, even if his mother is there to keep an eye on things. My fiance agrees with me, but I don't want to lose my relationship with my sister over this. This is supposed to be a happy time for me, and I am miserable. Am I wrong to omit him from the invitations? What should I do? If we focus on the party alone, I'm focusing on your words "sweet and loving." Your sister has her burden, and your nephew has his own. I believe in the power of positive reinforcement and in not making family dramas worse. So I would invite your nephew, not by Evite, but by a personal note from you to him. Since most people these days never write personal notes, he will take it seriously and realize that you are making a special effort. Which means that if he comes to the party, he will most likely be on good behavior. And you will keep your relationship with your sister in good order. ◆

AT THE PLATE

THE SPORTS REPORTER TURNED ASPIRING CHEF DISHES ON RECIPES FOR SUCCESS.

EMMY AWARD-WINNING SPORTS REPORTER JEN ROYLE, 40, recently made it to the finale of the ABC cooking series The Taste as the only non-professional chef competing. As a journalist, she has covered the New York Yankees, the Baltimore Ravens and the Red Sox. She is currently a reporter for The Boston Herald and host of the online video series Talk of the Town. A Boston native, she lives in the North End and recently released her second cookbook.

JONATHAN SOROFF: How long did you have to keep the fact that you didn't win to yourself?
JEN ROYLE: We finished taping at the end of September, so I've known for months. And as anyone who knows me can tell you, I have the biggest mouth, so it was very difficult to keep it a secret. I told a few family members and very close friends how I did, but I never gave away who was the actual winner.

Going from MLB to reality TV is a pretty strange transition. It is. But for 13 years before that, I was in locker rooms, and outside the locker room, all I did was cook, so for me it doesn't feel that strange. I would leave Fenway Park or Yankee Stadium and come home to watch cooking shows. I don't watch sports at home. I really shut them off when I'm away from work.

Favorite cooking show? They've changed over the years, because I'm becoming a better cook. I don't like to watch chefs who measure everything. Ina Garten on Barefoot Contessa drives me nuts with all her measuring. Real chefs don't measure. So I like shows where the chef says, "If you think it needs a little more heat, add some chile flakes. If you think it's too dry, add some chicken stock."

So you've outgrown some shows? I'm starting to watch shows where instead of learning the basics, I'm learning how to put twists on things. So my favorite cooking show right now? Obviously, I love The Taste. I still love Chopped. But I don't like watching shows that give you strange ingredients, because honestly, I'm never going to have the opportunity to try to fit jelly beans into my chicken marsala. I don't learn anything from that, and there are so many weird shows out there now. Cutthroat Kitchen is fun, but I don't think I'm going to have someone take all my pots and pans away and ask me to make something in a soup ladle.

Who was the best mentor on the show? Ludo, by far. And not just because I was on his team. He just cares so much. He considered us friends, as well as students. I learned the most from him. I wanted to be pushed to the limit and get that tough love. I work in locker rooms. I thrive in chaotic environments.

Most important thing that Davio's owner Steve DiFillippo taught you? He taught me how to shuck clams. He and Rodney Murillo, his executive chef, were amazing. I knew I was making clam chowder for my audition, and I wanted to put a spin on it. The three of us sat down and brainstormed. They acted like they were going in for the audition. Steve put a clock in front of me and said, "There's gonna be a clock on the show. You need to get it right five times. Now, do it." They taught me everything about cooking under pressure.

Do you think you were edited on The Taste to look like the bad guy? [Laughs] Nope. That's me. I made a conscious effort to stay true to myself. The things I said or the feelings I had, they were real. I didn't want to be someone I wasn't. That was how I felt at the time. It was all me. They never tried to cajole me into doing or saying anything. Everybody on that show was cursing, and they chose to portray me with a potty mouth, but that's who I am.

"Everybody on that show was cursing, and they chose to portray me with a potty mouth, but that's who I am."

What's next? I'm in culinary school at the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts. I'm learning so many things I wish I'd known in September. Maybe I'd have won The Taste.

Favorite Fenway snack? Fenway Franks are like crack. I eat three hot dogs every time I go there. It's the best. I love yellow mustard on a steamed hot dog.

Would you rather date a baseball player or a chef? A chef. I want somebody to cook for me.

Know any baseball players who are good chefs? No. Every baseball player I know hires a chef or a nutritionist.

Favorite seduction dish? Meow! Any kind of a gently cooked fish in a fragrant broth, like lemongrass and ginger, served with blanched vegetables. When I did it on the show, Anthony Bourdain called it very sophisticated, extremely well-executed and refined. Anybody who knows me knows that refined is the last word to describe me. I'm learning to cook more gently and delicately.

Thing you find hardest to make? I'm a horrible baker. It's one or the other. Chefs don't have the patience. I don't measure anything, and you have to in baking. I can cook a seven-course meal, but I can't bake a batch of cookies to save my life.

Weirdest food you ever ate? Duck heart. Surprisingly, it just tasted like roast beef.

Do you think you could own a restaurant? Yes. That's definitely in my future. I want a really small restaurant, like 20 seats, tops.

Favorite Red Sox player? Of all time? Pedro Martinez. I covered him for probably a decade, both with the Red Sox and the Mets. We developed a really nice friendship. I remember when his father passed away. It was the same day as my father's anniversary, July 23. I'm so lucky to know him on a level most people don't.

Biggest jerk? Carl Pavano. Not enough space on the page. Just a selfish jerk. Who else do I hate? Miguel Cabrera. So immature. But I think the biggest is Josh Beckett. Biggest jerk I've ever been around in professional sports.

How could a Boston girl cover the Yankees for seven years? I know! But I think what a lot of people don't understand is that a fan is not a journalist, and a journalist is not a fan. I was so excited that I had the opportunity to cover the Yankees, the rivalry was the last thing on my mind. Honestly, after a certain amount of time, you don't even look at these guys as baseball players. They become colleagues. You become friends. You get to know their children.

Person you'd most like to cook for? Ben Affleck. The way to a man's heart is through his stomach.

Anyone you'd like to give food poisoning to? Hell, yeah! Every Internet hater. And there are some bitchy females in the sports business I'd love to make throw up. ◆

ECRET MENUS, SPECIAL ORDERS, ART PROJECTS — IT'S A GOOD TIME TO BE A KID DINER // BY LINH TRAN BRINCAT

PERCHED IN AN EGG-SHAPED BOOSTER SEAT AT HER FATHER'S CRITICALLY ACCLAIMED RESTAURANT, WEST BRIDGE, LITTLE AUGUSTA GAUDET CAN'T STOP SMILING.

At 9 months old, she's the center of attention as servers stop by to ooh and aah over her cherubic cheeks and waving arms. Although she's clearly a VIP at West Bridge, what might be surprising is that all kids visiting the Kendall Square eatery get special treatment. Any child dining at the restaurant has access to a secret menu that includes a mini hamburger, mac 'n' cheese and chicken fingers created by Augusta's dad, chef/owner Matthew Gaudet, named by Food and Wine magazine as one of the country's 10 best new chefs in 2013. Eschewing the processed fare typical of kids' menus, Gaudet uses the same locally sourced, organic ingredients found in his refined creations for grown-ups to prepare mac 'n' cheese (made to order with elbow macaroni and a blend of asiago, cheddar and Meunster) and chicken fingers (featuring either Giannone or Crystal Valley D'Artagnan chicken and housemade sourdough breadcrumbs).

If none of the items on the secret menu pass muster, Gaudet's kitchen will graciously whip up special requests, such as handmade pasta tossed with butter and herbs, as long as they have the ingredients on hand. And they'll adjust items from the regular menu as needed. (Seafood potage with calamari "noodles" was a particular hit.) His staff—from those at the front of the house to the sous-chefs and line cooks in the kitchen—are trained to view the treatment of their pint-sized guests as an extension of their hospitality ethos. "I preach a solid ethos of guests first," Gaudet says. "We come last. It's a hospitality business. My feeling is kids should grow up around a table and should learn manners and compose themselves in a dining room. For a society, it's great to have kids learn to use silverware and be socialized. Our responsibility in the restaurant is to host the possibility of parents teaching their kids."

Gaudet is not the only chef with a progressive attitude about kids and fine dining. Census data suggest parents of young children are increasingly drawn to urban areas—last year, Trulia pegged Boston at number eight on its list of the top 10 metropolitan areas for "stroller set" population growth. And a growing number of restaurants, especially in neighborhoods where many young families have chosen to settle, view children as integral to their success. Unsurprisingly, many of their chefs are parents themselves.

Says Peter McCarthy, chef/owner of EVOO and Za, and the father of 9-year-old Shane and 6-year-old Caitlyn, "Our goal here is to serve great food in a comfortable atmosphere, not to be pretentious. After 17 years, we've seen parents with their kids, then their kids come back with their dates, and eventually their own kids." The idea of dining as a multigenerational event extends to both of his adjoining restaurants, despite their very different menus and price points. While Za is a pizza parlor serving $10 pies, and EVOO's mains run upward of $25, they share spacious bathrooms outfitted with changing tables and a similar family-friendly attitude. Children entering the EVOO door receive crayons and paper, and the same warm attention, as they do when they're greeted at Za. McCarthy says, "Children are just as welcome here as at Za. Many of the waitstaff and back of the house that work at EVOO also work at Za."

Like McCarthy, chef Rachel Klein of Liquid Art House, the 10,000-square-foot restaurant/gallery in the Back Bay, believes that it's just good business to market to tots. "From a chef's perspective," she says, "you'd be stupid not to cater to children. They're future diners. They eat out more than they ever have." Klein, the mother of 3-year-old Eva and 7-year-old Ethan, is sensitive to parents' struggle to maintain their own interests—like good food, wine and company—in the face of family demands. When she was at the Seaport Hotel's Aura, Klein created the popular event series Fine Dining, Family Style, where parents could grab cocktails and a refined meal while their children could design their own bento box, then be entertained by crafts and activities in a separate play area. Plans are in the works for a similar family-centric event at LAH, where parents will be able to dine at leisure while their kids learn about and create art—without breaking any of the thousand-dollar Lithuanian glasswork on display. "Children might not understand what's around them," Klein says of fine art and food, "but they're exposed to it." She speaks from experience. "I grew up going to art galleries, and my dad painted. Every year we had a trip to Europe and a trip somewhere in the U.S. And I remember that—my fondest memories were food and art memories. What my parents have exposed me to has really affected me."

Not every chef/parent believes that fine dining and children can or should be mixed. Tony Maws, father of 6-year-old Charlie, welcomes children to his neighborhood bar/restaurant the Kirkland Tap and Trotter with a kids' menu that includes a house-made hot dog, and his kitchen at Craigie on Main will happily create kid-pleasing plates like buttered pasta from scratch. But he thinks that guests at Craigie, who often come to have business dinners or celebrate a special occasion, "have a right to dine in peace." The white tablecloths and tasting menus at Craigie are a far cry from the more relaxed Kirkland, where Charlie's colorful drawings of ingredients and creative spellings of their names ("leak," "chickin" and "snaper") enliven the five-item kids' menu, all of which Charlie has tried and enjoyed. "Yesterday I was looking at a table with kids at brunch," Maws says of the atmosphere at Kirkland, "and their granola was all over the floor. No one blinked."

Since even the most well-behaved child is prone to accidental spills and fidgety exuberance, it helps if the restaurant doesn't take itself too seriously. Gaudet thinks West Bridge "attracts families because we have an indestructible space," one lacking tablecloths and lined with polished wood flooring. "If something falls on the floor, it won't cost any money to steam it from rugs," he says. Klein likewise appreciates a move away from fine-dining pretensions. "I feel like Liquid Art House is like home, not a cold, untouchable museum, but open to all types of people," she says. "I'm most proud of the diversity of our crowd."

The trend toward inclusive dining is in full effect at State Park. The neighborhood bar and restaurant is a hub for disparate groups who meet over the Southern-influenced creations of chef Tyler Sundet, a co-owner along with his wife, pastry chef Rachel Sundet of Hungry Mother. On any given night, young families having dinner sit at booths next to couples on dates and afterwork crowds out for a drink. Rachel Sundet says fellow co-owners Rachel Miller Munzer and her husband, Alon, have a "signature move" of taking kids on walks around whichever restaurant they're working, be it Hungry Mother or State Park, where they're fawned over by the staff while their parents dine. And if a child orders the popular BBQ spaghetti on State Park's menu, it's sure to come out with an extra, mountainous helping of shaved parmesan on top.

Having a child had a profound effect on the way the Sundets view the food they eat and serve. Says Tyler, "I've been more aware of things that have been raised organically. It's much more important to me that Zev [his 13-month-old son] is eating good food." That evolution is evident in the dishes at State Park, which opened in late 2013 with a bar-centric menu long on fried foods and short on vegetables and sides. State Park's new menu has changed to more closely resemble its upscale older sibling Hungry Mother, where Sundet worked the line with chef/co-owner Barry Maiden, with an expanded selection of seasonal vegetables and sides, as well as greens to round out the entrees.

He's not the only chef to notice a subtle but significant shift in his cooking. "Subconsciously it's entered my mind and lexicon," says West Bridge's Gaudet. "My wife is a gluten-free person, and it seeps into my creative process. Having a kid is a similar thing—I'm experimenting with textures and making things smoother." He says his evolution as a chef and as a father has come full circle. "My wife and I find a lot of cool base ideas for Augusta's food through Alain Ducasse's Cooking for Kids cookbook," Gaudet explains. "Which is funny because I spent many hours poring over his recipes as a younger cook for my own education. Somehow I think there has become a common ground with some of my flavor combinations in my food and Augusta's food we make." And with the move away from a precious fine-dining atmosphere, that common ground may become even more common.

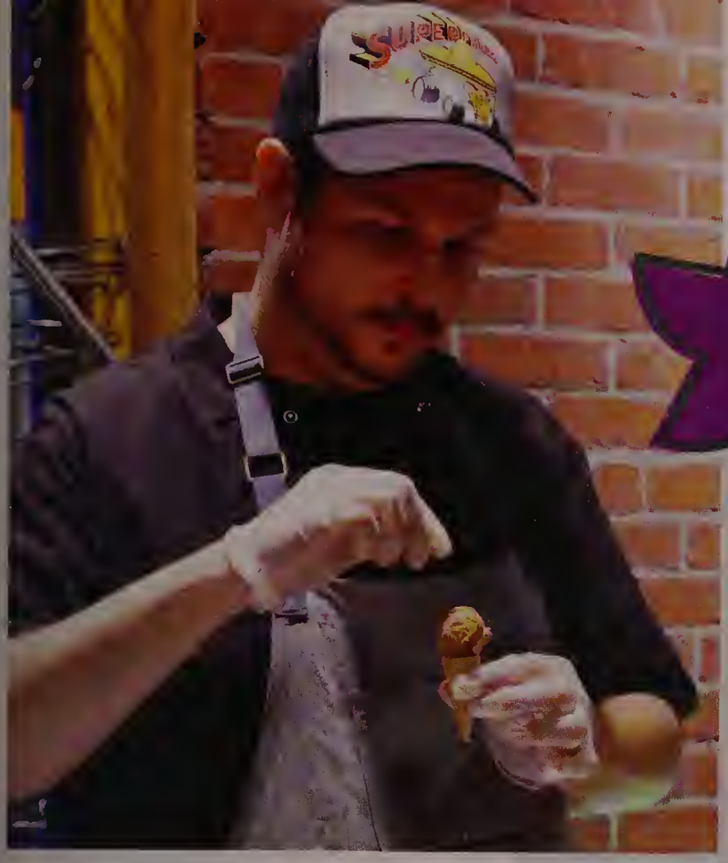
AFTER YEARS AS A GUEST ON THE FOOD SCENE, THE POP-UP RESTAURANT IS SECURING MORE PERMANENT DIGS

By Alexandra Cavallo • Photography by Dan Watkins



When Josh Lewin decided to leave his post as executive chef at Beacon Hill Bistro, taking part in an experimental pop-up program wasn't exactly part of the plan. But after he was approached about a six-month kitchen residency at cocktail bar Wink & Nod's new culinary incubator, his interest was more than piqued.

"We got the opportunity to operate our program with basically 100 percent creative and operational responsibilities, without having to invest in a South End lease," says Lewin, who had parted ways with the bistro after three years to found Bread & Salt Hospitality with partner Katrina Jazayeri, aiming to open a restaurant of their own. "We were able to test what, we think, is a great idea."

A longer-term take on the typical pop-up format—where a chef takes over a restaurant's kitchen, or a less-traditional venue, for an often one-night-only dining experience—Wink & Nod's program offers up-and-coming chefs the chance to run their own restaurant within an established brick-and-mortar. "The point is to try to develop our own little network of chefs, to give people the avenue to have a restaurant, when not everyone has that financial capability," explains Euz Azevedo, president of Boston Nightlife Ventures (BNV), Wink & Nod's parent company.

If a typical pop-up is like a crash course in opening a restaurant, Wink & Nod's incubator, which launched last spring with Whisk (the popular pop-up from Jeremy Kean and Philip Kruta) and welcomed Bread & Salt in September, aims to be more of a master's program. The format is a first for Boston—and would be a first in most cities (though Chicago is slated to see a similar concept, Intro, open in February).

While Wink & Nod might be reinventing the wheel in a big way, it's a wheel that's been rolling here—and gaining speed—for some time. For many chefs, pop-ups have served as invaluable vehicles for honing their own culinary voices.

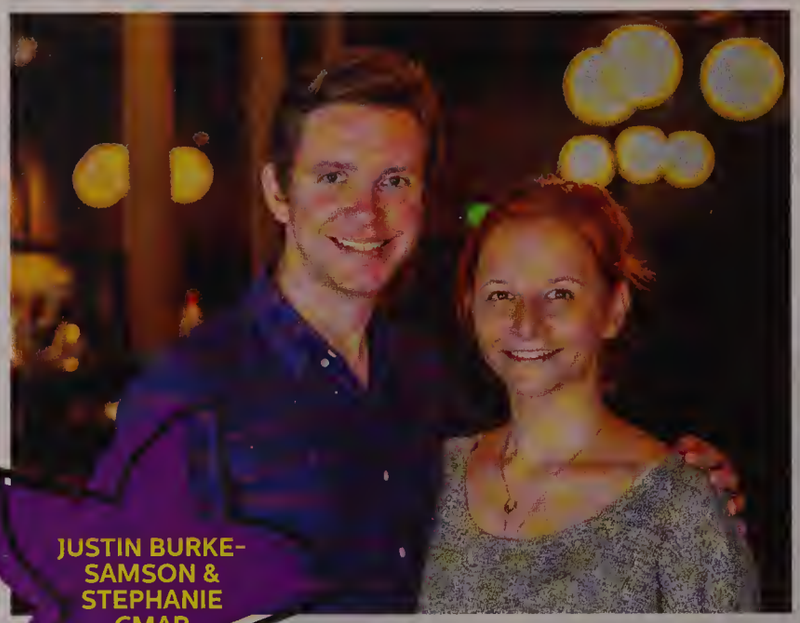
"IT'S THE OPENING NIGHT OF A RESTAURANT EVERY SINGLE TIME YOU DO A POP-UP. AND THAT MAKES IT REALLY CHALLENGING. BUT TO ME, THAT'S HALF THE FUN."

That's true of early local pioneers like Will Gilson and Louis DiBiccari, who both pursued pop-ups while working in established kitchens. Gilson founded Eat Boston in 2010, launching a series of innovative dining experiences throughout town before opening his own restaurant, Inman's Puritan & Company, in late 2012. Similarly, DiBiccari started underground dining experience Chef Louie Night, an "Iron Chef-like" pop-up series, out of his apartment in 2003. He ran the popular pop-ups for years before eventually opening his own brick-and-mortar, Fort Point's Tavern Road, in early 2013 with his brother Michael.

Those success stories haven't gone unnoticed by young chefs dreaming of having their own restaurants. In the past, an ambitious young gun's best (and often only) bet was to work through the traditional culinary ranks—from prep cook to sous-chef and so on—often under the tutelage of an established chef. And while many chefs emphasize the considerable merits of that route, other paths have proliferated. Food trucks have spawned brick-and-mortar restaurants (and vice versa). And pop-ups have been used not only by newcomers hoping for a foothold, but also by established chefs looking to flex their creative muscle. Years in, pop-ups have proven to be anything but a fly-by-night fad.

Just ask Mark O'Leary. "I think it'd be silly just to write them off as a trend," says the O Ya and jm Curley alum. Before settling into his current role as executive chef at Chinatown hotspot Shojo, O'Leary played around with a couple of pop-ups: high-concept snack food project the Future of Junk Food and wildly popular late-night pop-up Guchi's Midnight Ramen. "It's a great platform for demonstrating whatever your passions are. I think any young cook who wants to do something like that should just get out there and do it. It'll only better you. It'll make you a better cook. It'll make you more organized. And, more important, it'll teach you what not to do. You can very much learn from your failures while doing pop-ups because they're so concentrated into one short span of time," O'Leary says. "Essentially it's the opening night of a restaurant every single time you do a pop-up. And that makes it really challenging. But to me, that's half the fun. It's sort of like rogue cooking."

MAKING ROOM FOR ERROR



With their joint pastry pop-up, Party of Two, Top Chef alum Stephanie Cmar (Stacked Donuts) and partner Justin Burke-Samson (Trademark Tarts) found that chance to learn on their feet—without the risk of running a brand-new business into the ground. "There are always menu disasters, or multiple disasters, in a restaurant. You're always putting out a fire," says Burke-Samson, who, with no formal training as a pastry chef, was a relative newcomer to the industry when he linked up with Cmar for their much-buzzed-about project, currently in the early stages of transitioning into a brick-and-mortar shop. "Pop-ups are going to give you that brief version of that if you've never been in a restaurant. You need that. You need to know how to troubleshoot."

"You can glamorize the whole situation way too much," Cmar adds. "You can think that a restaurant is just going to be an immediate success and there won't be any hard work and you'll never have to worry about your budgeting or food costs."

Mary Ting Hyatt agrees. Before opening Bagelsaurus in Porter Square, she sold her handmade bagels as part of a weekly pop-up out of Brookline's Cutty's, her then-employer, working out many of her own growing pains through the "microbakery."

"The pop-up was sort of like training wheels," Hyatt says. "I didn't own the shop. I didn't have to deal with the complications of, say, a snowstorm and digging out the trash, and all of the physical things you have to do with an actual store—and a lot of the stresses. With a pop-up, you can kind of do what you want and test the waters, and it's accepted as a test."

JJ Gonson, personal chef and owner of locavore catering and event company Cuisine en Locale, ran her One Night Culinary Events series (complete with Viking- and Day of the Dead-themed feasts) before opening a permanent location for her company in Somerville. A self-trained chef without any real connections to the restaurant industry, Gonson was able to play around with her craft in a way she maintains just isn't possible when running a brick-and-mortar. "A pop-up is absolute freedom," she says. "Traditional kitchens are not places for experimentation. Food is expensive; so is labor time. If you are paying for overhead and meeting margins, you are not messing about."

"THESE ARE PEOPLE WHO KNOW WAY MORE THAN US... AND THEY'RE LETTING US COME, AND THEY'RE INTERESTED IN WHAT WE'RE DOING."

As a veteran of the industry, both on the creative and business sides of operations, newly appointed BNV chief culinary officer Bill Brodsky is all too familiar with those margins. "I think back to when I was coming up: I would look at food as 'These are the colors on my palette, these are all the tools I have.' And when I owned my own business, it wasn't an avocado any more; it was a dollar and twenty cents," says Brodsky, whose first venture as chef/owner, City Landing, shuttered in January. "You have young chefs that are full of passion and talent but—forget the finances—sometimes don't even know the steps to take, because there's not one book that everyone reads and then all of a sudden you go open a restaurant. But if you find that book, send me a copy—we'll take 12 of 'em!"

In lieu of the discovery of a definitive manual for Successful Restaurant Ownership, Wink & Nod's program aims to offer its chefs a real taste of what it takes. "This is a great opportunity to say, 'OK, you've got the talent; now let's see if we can develop it into a business.' I think that's missing, gone the way of the dodos, so to speak, for up-and-coming chefs these days," Brodsky says. "Unless you're on a reality TV show, you don't get discovered!"

Lewin, for his part, says it's already helped him get a far better understanding of what his customers want. "We always really believed that we should be careful about developing concepts before understanding a neighborhood and a location and an economic market. These things change so quickly and they're so specific, especially in Boston," Lewin says. "We came in here and saw a cocktail lounge functioning with this really cool company. So we thought OK, this is going to be a place where late 20- to 30-somethings come to try the latest thing, and we can work in that model. So we put out a similar menu [to Whisk], but we put a couple entrees on that menu, because we're a company that's focused on a seated dinner service and a high level of table service. We thought, we'll throw these on and see which sells, and we'll keep one on the menu—and we sold out of all the entrees in like 20 minutes. That just solidified our belief that you can't make assumptions about a place."

That kind of immediate market feedback has also been key for Cmar and Burke-Samson, who both say they've met customers who have turned into real friends. (Like "Donut Ben" and "Pop-Tart Charlie!" Cmar jokes.) "I think [starting with a pop-up] is almost mandatory prior to opening up anything," she says. "Because you don't know what people are going to like. You might have an awesome concept, but there's no demand for it. It's all driven by demand."

"We've sent out surveys to all of our guests and customers and people who follow us on social media," Burke-Samson adds. "We just took that risk and said, 'Instead of us telling you what you want, tell us what you want.'"

ON DECK: Patrick Enage, with Bill Brodsky (right), takes over Wink & Nod's kitchen this spring.

COMMUNITY SERVINGS

Support from Boston's culinary community, chefs say, is just as important to a fledging pop-up's success. Upstarts like Hyatt and Burke-Samson, and even more seasoned chefs like Cmar and O'Leary, maintain that they couldn't have gotten their respective experiments off the ground were it not for the kindness of industry heavyweights willing to open their kitchens—some of them relative strangers who were simply interested in seeing what a fellow chef had up their sleeve.

"That was the crazy part," Cmar recalls. "These are people who know way more than us about everything. These are people that have the brick and mortar. And they're letting us come, and they're interested in what we're doing." Adds Burke-Samson with a laugh, "I worked with some really awesome chefs, and internally I was fucking freaking out. And they were like, 'It's just a normal day for me.'"

"Years and years ago, you would never even think of going to some chef's restaurant and opening up shop for one night," O'Leary says. "But I think the Boston community, specifically, is really open to that. I think most chefs in town are really friendly and nurturing and want to help other chefs along. It only betters a city. It betters the food scene. I've talked to chefs, and they're like, this thing wouldn't fly in New York. I think we're a competitive city, but also I think we all embrace the competition. We patronize each other's restaurants. I think that's how it should be. That's how you create a really involved dining community."

Azevedo and Brodsky say that a sense of community is a driving force behind Wink & Nod's pop-up residencies. "We want to make sure that when people come out of here, they are successful," says Azevedo. "I want to be able to look back and see a young chef become the next superstar. Really, we want to be part of the dining community here in Boston and develop talent. We want them to leave here after six months and open their own restaurant."

Certainly, the road to success is paved with potholes, and the Wink & Nod team has seen their share, not the least of which is figuring out how to smoothly pass a fully functional restaurant over to a brand-new chef with a brand-new concept, seemingly overnight. "It was a lot of hard work!" says Lewin of his own transition into the kitchen. "[But] Wink & Nod, as a restaurant, is fairly young too. So three years from now this conversation will probably be very different. There's nothing to go on, no past experience in this sort of thing. None of us has ever worked in a restaurant like this, because there isn't one. So it's very much building a program from nothing, and it's fun to be a part of that."

Early this spring, Lewin will pass the torch to former City Landing chef de cuisine Patrick Enage for the next six-month stint. Enage is a relatively unknown entity in Boston, but he's excited to take advantage of the residency's unique format to cultivate a fan base and, hopefully, bring a fresh perspective to the scene. "Who knows, maybe I'll be able to attract some investors to open my own restaurant," Enage says. "But as we look ahead to the next few months, I'm embracing the pop-up format as an opportunity to tie together the flavors, decor, ambiance and hospitality of my childhood in the context of a full-fledged dining concept."

He's also looking forward to continuing to grow under the mentorship of Brodsky, who met him in 2002 at Cape Cod's Wequassett Resort and Golf Club. "Bill showed me that being a chef wasn't just about putting the best food out or being the biggest badass in the kitchen—or at the resort for that matter. It wasn't just about being a successful financial manager or a great leader. It was all that plus uncompromising integrity: your respect for yourself and, ultimately, your respect for food."

Enage's menu is still a work in progress (see the sidebar at right). But then, the Wink & Nod team admits that, like many a pop-up, their whole operation is very much in the "figuring it out stage"—though they figure more out with each changing of the culinary guard. "Innovation is not clean and tidy. Innovation is dirty," Brodsky says. "There are hiccups and challenges until the very end result, when you get something wonderful. I think as we continue to improve this model, we're going to begin spitting out some truly innovative talent."

WHET YOUR APPETITE

"I'm very excited about bringing the food of the Philippines, Singapore, Vietnam, Thailand and [beyond] to Boston's dinner table," says chef Patrick Enage, who spent January eating his way through Asia. His menu is still in development, but here's a sneak peek of what to expect when he pops up at Wink & Nod this spring.

KABAYAKI GLAZED SWORDFISH BELLY WITH GRILLED TAIWAN LETTUCE AND SALTED DUCK EGG VINAIGRETTE
"I love anything belly—pork, swordfish, tuna—because it's where the intense flavors reside."

BAKKWA WITH DAIKON, CARROT, THAI CHILI PEPPERS, CILANTRO AND SWEET VINEGAR GLAZE
"I really want to showcase Southeast Asia's wider multicultural culinary heritage. The ingredients here, starting with bakkwa, a Chinese salty-sweet dried meat that is similar to jerky, represent the region's culinary diversity."

18-HOUR BRAISED PORK BELLY IN KABOCHA-PHO BROTH
"This dish balances rich texture and complex subtlety—a signature of a lot of authentic Southeast Asian cuisine."

PRAWNS WITH SQUID INK LO MEIN IN RED CURRY BROTH
"This is a modern twist on the ever-popular ramen with a distinctively multicultural combination of flavors. Be on the lookout for fresh noodles made in house!"

SILENT NIGHT Some might consider themselves lucky to be met with mere dead silence after telling dear old dad they're eloping—with a circus performer no less. That's not the case in D.W. Griffith's 1925 comedy Sally of the Sawdust, a silent film that proves you don't need words to feel parental disappointment. Disowned by her prominent family, the Big Top-bound bride and her new husband meet an untimely end, leaving their daughter Sally to the care of a lovable juggler and con man. But it's not until Sally unwittingly crosses paths with her grandparents that the real family circus starts. Organist Jeff Rapsis provides live accompaniment, so zip it when the film screens on March 8 at the Somerville Theatre. / Grace Rasmus

Reviews by Brett Michel

American Sniper ★★★ We've grown used to Bradley Cooper as a comic performer, but director Clint Eastwood recognized something deeper. We first view Cooper's Chris Kyle as he's staring down the scope of his sniper rifle at his target: an Iraqi boy holding a grenade. As Chris trains his sights on this young killer, who can't be more than 7 or 8 years old, Eastwood cuts to Chris as a child in Texas, shooting a deer during an inaugural hunt with his dad. "That was one hell of a shot," Wayne Kyle (Ben Reed) tells his son. "You got a gift." That gift leads Chris to become a Navy SEAL. Called for service on the day he weds Taya (Sienna Miller, strong in an underwritten, weepy role), he heads for a solitary honeymoon in Iraq, where his bullet will rip through that grenade-wielding child's chest. This will stand as the first of an unmatched 160 confirmed kills across four tours of duty, earning Chris the nickname "The Legend," as Cooper subtly projects the effects of PTSD. While the adaptation of Kyle's autobiography has taken heat as an endorsement of 'Merica's war machine, this is Eastwood at his most apolitical, no matter what chair he prefers talking to. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Black Sea ★★★ Jude Law continues to move away from the pretty-boy roles that defined most of his career with this efficient, suspenseful thriller set within the claustrophobic confines of a submarine. He's Robinson, the skipper who's commanding a crew of greedy misfits chasing sunken Nazi gold lost in the depths of the Black Sea. Anything that can go wrong does, beginning with the loose cannon (Ben Mendelsohn) who jams a knife into the chest of a Russian crewmate. As each of these men have been promised equal shares of any treasure they find, they increasingly turn on one another, and the deaths begin to pile up faster than the bricks of gold they're searching for. Director Kevin Macdonald (The Last King of Scotland) has fashioned a tight little thriller where "dark, cold death" is constantly threatened, and although it's not quite The Treasure of the Sierra Madre, it still offers an entertaining look into the dark hearts of desperate men. Unless the prospect of cramped quarters reminds you too much of rush-hour commutes on the Green Line, there are worse films to take a plunge with. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Imitation Game ★★★ Director Morten Tyldum spends so much time setting up complex puzzles that he oversimplifies the life of his central enigma: Alan Turing, a British genius posthumously regarded as a father of the modern computer. Fortunately, Benedict Cumberbatch expertly plays the tortured intellect, who was enlisted to join "half a dozen crossword enthusiasts in a small village in the south of London" racing to crack the supposedly unbreakable Nazi codes of Germany's Enigma machine during World War II. It's Turing's hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle constructed by screenwriter Graham Moore, working from a biography that revealed more about the real Turing, including how he was fascinated by the scene in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs where the evil queen dips an apple into poison. Turing was sentenced for indecency in '52, and onscreen text informs us of his tragic suicide at the age of 41, a year after beginning government-mandated "chemical castration." It's a very conventional ending to a film about a complex, puzzling life. What we don't see is that Turing died of cyanide poisoning—a half-eaten apple beside him, foam coating his mouth, no prince to save him. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Jupiter Ascending ★ That this latest fantasy adventure from siblings Andy and Lana Wachowski is a disaster should come as little surprise. Originally slated to open in July, it was ostensibly delayed to give the visual effects artists another seven months to perfect their work. But no amount of tinkering could have fixed the Wachowskis' script, or the lack of chemistry between Mila Kunis and Channing Tatum. She's Jupiter Jones, a Russian cleaning woman in Chicago, and he's Caine, a part-canine hunter from space who skates in on anti-gravity boots to save her from death. You see, aliens are bent on killing her before she can claim her place as the reincarnation of a mythical space queen who doubled as the CEO of a corporation that raises and harvests societies throughout the cosmos as fuel for immortality. That's right: The movie's central conceit—that we're all just food for our overlords—is straight out of The Matrix, the Wachowskis' first big hit. Alas, it's been 16 years and two dreadful sequels since that picture, and after failing with adaptations of cartoons (Speed Racer) and novels (Cloud Atlas), they've hit rock bottom with this original, awful take on the young adult genre. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Kingsman: The Secret Service ★★★ Matthew Vaughn reinvigorated Marvel Comics' X-Men for the big screen in 2011's X-Men: First Class, a period piece where he demonstrated an affinity for the swinging '60s, in addition to the command of action filmmaking and editing he'd displayed in 2010's Kick-Ass, his violent, entertaining deconstruction of the modern superhero movie, based on writer Mark Millar's comic book series. Now, Vaughn and regular collaborator Jane Goldman have freely adapted another Millar comic book, 2012's The Secret Service. Although set in the present, this affectionately winking, post-modern take on spy films aims squarely at the James Bond franchise, specifically the 1970s movies, with Oscar-winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart. He recruits "Eggsy" (newcomer Taron Egerton), who was Olympic material before he dropped out of the Royal Marines and into a life of petty crime. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Hart tells the lad, and he's not kidding—the designer suits Eggsy's outfitted with are as bulletproof as his ammunition-firing umbrella, and they'll be needed for all the over-the-top action and carnage ahead. If Bond's upper lip has grown too stiff for you, Eggsy's new breed of spy is bound to raise a few eyebrows. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Last Five Years ★★1/2 Anna Kendrick proves once again that she has the singing chops that charmed audiences in Pitch Perfect and Into the Woods, but writer/director Richard LaGravenese fairs about as well as Rob Marshall did when he brought the latter to the screen last year. Opening up Jason Robert Brown's hit musical, LaGravenese isn't granted the hummable tunes that grab fans of Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine's fairy tale theater piece, but he at least has a structure that doesn't grow tiresome at the midway mark. Instead, the middle is the converging point for two storylines—told almost entirely through song—that run in reverse of each other. Kendrick is Cathy Hiatt, a struggling actress whose scenes begin at the end of her marriage and move backward in time to the start of the relationship; Jeremy Jordan (from Joyful Noise and TV's Smash) is Jamie Wellerstein, a successful Jewish novelist who serenades his "shiksa goddess" from the beginning of their affair straight through to their breakup. Their tales intersect when he proposes to Cathy, but alas, even Kendrick can't quite make the material sing, with handheld camera work that oddly distracts from the intimacy. (At Coolidge Corner.)

A Most Violent Year ★★★1/2 It's difficult to watch writer/director J.C. Chandor's third impressive movie (after Margin Call and All Is Lost) without recalling The Godfather, although the violence isn't as overt as it was in Francis Ford Coppola's films, despite the threat established with Chandor's choice of title. A Most Violent Year also takes place in and around New York, but it's set during a different era than Coppola's mob masterpieces. Specifically, the winter of 1981—one of the city's most crime-ridden years. Oscar Isaac plays Abel Morales, an upwardly mobile immigrant who's trying to build a good life for his wife, Anna (Jessica Chastain), and their daughters by running a legitimate heating oil company in a corrupt industry. Chandor spends as much time focusing on the Morales' marriage as he does on Abel's troubled business dealings. Anna's father was a small-time hood, and as much as she's pressuring her biblically named husband to become a big-time one, he holds to his metaphorical guns—even as she resorts to packing a real one, creating more tension in a film rife with it. Isaac and Chastain are superb, as is Albert Brooks as Abel's lawyer. This is not to be missed. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Project Almanac ★★ Of all the things I could do, given the ability to travel through time, I'm not sure traveling to Lollapalooza would rank terribly high. But then, if given the money to make a movie about time travel, I wouldn't make it in the style of the "found footage" thrillers that have been a dime a dozen since The Blair Witch Project popularized the genre in 1999, either. Nevertheless, brilliant teenager David Raskin (Jonny Weston) does the former, hoping to win the heart of Jessie Pierce (Sofia Black-D'Elia), his high school crush, when he should probably focus on getting a scholarship to MIT. (You'd think building a time machine would be enough to guarantee tuition.) Along with his sister, Christina (Virginia Gardner), and best friends Quinn (Sam Lerner) and Adam (Allen Evangelista), they begin to adversely alter the present with each trip into the past. Tragedies pile up, with David taking it upon himself to try to set things straight. Director Dean Israelite does what he can with the shaky-cam format, but you wish he'd have simply traveled back himself and conceptualized a smarter film. But hey—Lollapalooza! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Red Army ★★★1/2 Documentarian Gabe Polsky offers a hugely entertaining, easily digestible history of the Soviet Union through this account of the rise and fall of the most successful dynasty in sports: the Red Army hockey team. It's told from the perspective of the team's captain, Slava Fetisov, introduced as a cantankerous 56-year-old who refuses to be interviewed. More interested in his cellphone, he tells the off-camera Polsky, "I'm busy now." When he does open up, you get a greater understanding of a country, a culture and the politics that simultaneously drove and constrained them. Hockey stars were used as potent patriotic symbols, even as their brilliant coach, Anatoly Tarasov, was replaced by a KGB-approved stooge who offered none of the paternal protection of his predecessor. The team and country suffered, the economy collapsed and the NHL came calling, offering big money for top players. Many signed lucrative contracts, and the government was happy to trade—as long as they could keep 90 percent of players' salaries. When the loyal Fetisov finally took a public stand against his coach, he was branded a traitor. Fortunes change, however. As you'll discover, perhaps he has important business on that phone, after all. (At Kendall Square.)

Selma ★★★ Ava DuVernay's film shares much in common with Steven Spielberg's Lincoln; both focus on the back-room political deals and maneuvering of their protagonists, as well as on these men's rallying public personas. But there's a very good reason her movie isn't called King: It's a historical chronicle about a movement, set during a riotous three-month period in 1965, when the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. led a peaceful campaign against violent opposition that culminated in an epic march in Alabama from Selma to Montgomery and coincided with President Lyndon B. Johnson's signing of the Voting Rights Act. DuVernay's intimate dramatization of the civil rights movement is enlivened by the remarkable central performance of David Oyelowo as King. The British actor brings the same humanity and frustration to his role that Daniel Day-Lewis brought to the embattled president in Lincoln, with just as much humor. Shame that fellow Brits Tom Wilkinson (as Johnson) and Tim Roth (as George Wallace) feel so utterly out of place in their roles. Nevertheless, DuVernay's achievement is a reminder of the road we still need to travel. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Song of the Sea ★★★★ You know those remarkably stylized animated end credits that are a Pixar specialty? The sequences that appear to be handcrafted, unlike the hyper-realistic computer-generated wonders that preceded them? If you're lucky enough to have seen director Tomm Moore's Academy Award-nominated The Secret of Kells, then you're aware that entire feature films can be hand-animated in a similar style. Now Moore is back, five years later, with his latest Oscar-nominated animated masterpiece. Based on the Irish legend of the selkies—seals that transform into humans while on land—Song of the Sea tells the tale of 6-year-old seal-child Saoirse. She and older brother Ben escape their grandmother's house in the city to return to their father and dog in their lighthouse home by the sea. Pursued by an owl witch, they discover a world of magic and uncover untold secrets of their past. Featuring the voices of Brendan Gleeson and Fionnula Flanagan, this charming picture offers a wonderful alternative to computer-animated fare, with music by composer Bruno Coulais (Coraline) and Irish band Kila that only adds to the enchantment. (At Kendall Square.)

Taken 3 ★ Don't be taken by this cynical cash grab that trades on Liam Neeson's good name. Even he looks bored in his third time playing ex-covert operative Bryan Mills, a man whose "particular set of skills" find him trying to escape a plot that's a rehash of The Fugitive. Screenwriters Luc Besson and Robert Mark Kamen's brazen theft wouldn't be complete unless they had Bryan, framed for the murder of his ex-wife (Famke Janssen), escaping into the sewers with a dogged detective, Franck Dotzler (Forest Whitaker), hot on his trail. And lest you think Dotzler is the oddest-named person in this joyless exercise in PG-13 inaction, this hopefully final installment of the franchise that launched Neeson as a formidable action star at age 56 is once again directed by Olivier Megaton. The Frenchman (nee Olivier Fontana), a former graffiti artist, took his name from his birthday—the 20th anniversary of the A-bombing of Hiroshima—a choice that's about as culturally sensitive as this series and its potpourri of foreign terrorists taking aim at Bryan's family. Speaking of, 31-year-old Maggie Grace returns as Bryan's college-age daughter. That takes a special set of skills, too. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Two Days, One Night* (Deux Jours, Une Nuit) ★★★★ Belgian brothers Jean-Pierre and Luc Dardenne's newest masterpiece focuses on Sandra Bya (Marion Cotillard in an Oscar-nominated performance), a woman who has a single weekend to convince a majority of her 16 co-workers to save her job—by forgoing their 1,000 euro bonuses. The Dardennes typically feature nonprofessional actors and follow their protagonists from behind, but here, working for the first time with an international star in a lead role, they capitalize on Cotillard's deeply expressive face, downplaying her natural beauty and finding a fractured psyche within her eyes. In placing their unflinching gaze squarely on the face of a seasoned pro, the Dardennes have captured one of their most naturalistic performances yet. They also capture a harsh truth: Most of Bya's co-workers aren't selfish, but simply struggling to get by, like so many are. And we witness this, time and again, as the Dardennes are steadfast in showing us each of Bya's encounters with them. Not nearly as depressing as it sounds, the film reveals some of the best and worst of humanity, but it's the kindness and generosity that you'll remember—and the changes of heart that don't come frequently enough. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

GO CATFISH

Growing up, Van McCann spent many nights sleeping in a linen closet, thanks to the tight quarters at his parents' B&B. It was probably good practice for the five years he spent sleeping in a small van while starting out with his band, Catfish and the Bottlemen. Paying their dues paid off: The Welsh indie rockers have seen rising success since breaking onto the scene stateside with their debut album, The Balcony, kicking off 2015 with a spotlight on Late Show with David Letterman and a nearly sold-out international tour. It's a testament to their layered sound—lively beats in unlikely union with somber lyricism, which simultaneously get feet tapping and hearts wrenching. Here's hoping you hooked tickets to their sold-out show on March 5 at Great Scott. / Kate Joseph

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FINDING NEVERLAND Any reader who has dreamed of following the Marauder's Map through Hogwarts' secret passageways will appreciate Literary Landscapes: Maps from Fiction, a new exhibit that illustrates the importance of geography to fantasy. Want to investigate London with Sherlock Holmes or battle Captain Hook in Neverland? Perhaps you'd prefer to see through Khaleesi's eyes as she flies on dragon-back over Westeros or journey through Ruth Stiles Gannett's Wild Island (pictured). All roads lead to adventure at the Boston Public Library, where Literary Landscapes is on view through Oct. 25. / Meaghan Leahy

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeck-Boston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Mar-row Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 playlist, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

GOING TO MASS CAN BE A DRAG...

Aside from gin and grapefruit juice, there's little that can improve Sunday brunch more than clown nuns in drag.

Nunch, held by The Boston Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence at Club Cafe, raised money for the group's various charitable endeavors and offered a showcase for their elaborate habits and extravagant Venetian-inflected makeup.

"Thank God there's a bloody mary bar," said one guest upon arrival.

Even watching the guests take their seats provided entertainment. One table was short a place setting, triggering an awkward standoff between three separate groups seated there. A lot of eye-rolling and throwing of shade ensued, but it was eventually sorted out, and everyone lined up for the buffet. Besides the nuns—who have names like Sister Eunice X, Sister Tori D'Affair and Sister Gloria LeLuia—the entertainment included some local comedians, one of whom said, "Does anyone here work in mental health?" to which someone in the audience shouted out, "Once a week, with my shrink."

Present and accounted for: legal eagle John Affuso, daddy of the cloth Alex Oneto, redheaded good-time gal Stephanie Carrigg, dashing do-gooder Marc Davino, iconoclastic chef and author Didi Emmons, assorted man candy and one person who said, "I am way too hungover to be here."

One hundred percent of the proceeds benefited the group's Community Grants, and after coffee (and one last cocktail) was served, the 2014 recipients were announced.

"They're just like real nuns, only fun," observed a lapsed Catholic. "They even host Bingo on Monday nights."

BLAMING THE MESSENGER...

Despite this winter's mandate of practicality over fashion, everyone looked smashing at Celebrating Self-Sufficiency, the annual luncheon benefiting Dress for Success, held at the Renaissance Boston Waterfront Hotel.

The afternoon attracted the likes of power couple Jacqui and Wayne Budd, banking bigwig Joanne Jaxtimer, bootlegger Catherine Stanton Schiff, broadcasting babes Mary Menna and Candy O'Terry, presidential pal Carol Fulp, silver fox Dusty Rhodes, snacky banker Rick Musiol Jr. and his colleague, honoree Denise Leyhe, first lady Angela Menino and her delightful daughter, Susan Menino Fenton, brunette bombshell Tina Murley, the lovably bubbly Jodi Wolin, Chronicle stunner Shayna Seymour, uber mover and shaker Bennie Wiley, and so on and so forth.

Perhaps because of the relentless cold and snow, everyone seemed more than willing to imbibe at lunch on a Friday, and by the time the plates were cleared and this year's Glass Slipper honorees were recognized, everyone was well lubricated for the live auction.

Channel 5 meteorologist Mike Wankum did the honors, and he did an admirable job, prompting one guest to say, "I'm really impressed. If I was a weatherman in Boston this winter, I'd be afraid of showing my face in public." ◆

SPRING IT ON

SPRING FASHION IS THE MOST SURREAL of issues for magazines in northern climes. Editors with lead times like ours have three choices: Shoot in studio, jet off to a more congenial latitude or try to find some small pocket of sunshine, some oasis evocative of the season to come, right where they are. We happily went the third route, photographing our cover story mid-blizzard at Tower Hill Botanic Garden's Orangerie, an 18th-century-style greenhouse less than an hour away in Boylston. It's a lush setting for Lydia Santangelo's spread of bold floral looks—no shrinking violets here.

The same could be said of Bloom Couture, an innovative studio bringing Japanese moss balls and other exotic flora to Boston, as Renata Certo-Ware notes in this issue. Elsewhere, Santangelo highlights some fab fringed handbags, Alayna Eberhart scours South End indies for stackable rings and Mopsy Strange Kennedy reads up on the most stylish of superheroes, Wonder Woman. (Indestructible bracelets never go out of fashion.) Meanwhile, Sarah Hagman chats with some local fashion pros about the trends that have them most excited for spring. It'll likely be a few weeks before we can shift our wardrobes out of Snowmageddon mode and enjoy them, but I hope this issue helps tide you over in the meantime.

Design in Bloom

The diorama of driftwood, antique finds and exotic flora in the window is your first tipoff. Step inside new South End floral studio Bloom Couture, and any remaining inkling that this is simply your average flower shop is quickly corrected. Here, you're more likely to leave with a vintage vase of long-stemmed kale roses than a fistful of filler flowers. Hanging Japanese moss balls take up an entire wall. Air plants poke out of hollowed cacao shells, and land anemones are arranged in scientific beakers. It's exactly how one imagines the greenhouse at Hogwarts would look.

And owners Suphoj Chancheaw and Scott Vanich are wizards at whipping up designs that feel deeply personal: They encourage customization, rarely creating the same thing twice, and deliver the results by hand. Friends for more than 20 years, the two art-schooled expats from Thailand attended Columbia College in Chicago, where Chancheaw pursued a master's degree in architecture and Vanich studied graphic design. Both ended up moving to Boston and worked together at design firms and flower shops throughout the city before scouting locations for a floral studio of their own. When they finally found a space on Tremont Street last summer, Chancheaw knew it was a perfect fit. "In Boston, when you live in a neighborhood, you're really part of that neighborhood, and you feel welcomed," he says. "I had lived in the South End for almost 10 years. I like the neighborhood, and people here are really supportive of local businesses."

Indeed, neighbors, design industry acquaintances and walk-ins alike have been lured in by the duo's living sculptures. Crafting them, Vanich says, isn't so different from graphic design. "It's about the graphics of nature—the prints on leaves, their shapes—and putting them together to make a new form." For his part, Chancheaw traces his fascination with floral design back to childhood, when he'd create elaborate banana leaf arrangements, a Thai tradition, alongside his grandmother.

Another tie to their roots? The shop's small selection of soaps handmade in Thailand, which they plan to build on with more bath and body products. On his next trip there at the end of the year, Chancheaw will source herbal compresses, traditionally used in Thai spas to relieve sore muscles—just in time for next winter's shoveling marathon.

So, half a world away from the banana leaf arrangements of his childhood, what would Grandma say? "My grandmother is no longer alive today," Chancheaw says, "but she would have been proud that I carried on her tradition of design." / Renata Certo-Ware

EASY BEING GREEN

Think plastic is the only kind of plant that would survive in your city apartment? Here's something for every skill level.

BEGINNER: AIR PLANT
This is ideal for urban gardeners—even those with a penchant for frequent getaways. It grows without soil, so just spray it directly with water once a week or so. Direct sunlight means a richer color, but isn't a must.

INTERMEDIATE: SUCCULENT
This hipster darling is pickier than an air plant, but not by much. It requires a good amount of sunlight to maintain its Instagrammably cute form—too little and it will contort trying to reach the light. Water it once a week.

ADVANCED: KOKEDAMA
Like a puppy or a child, a moss ball needs a little love and a good bath every now and then. Hang it up or place it on a saucer in a sunny spot, and spray it regularly with water. Twice a week, give it a thorough soak.

RAW TALENT

BACK BAY GAINS AN INTIMATE NEW OYSTER BAR.

Select Oyster Bar
50 Gloucester St., Boston
(857-239-8064)
selectboston.com

MICHAEL SERPA IS THINKING SMALL. And he's loving it. Sure, the chef/owner has big plans for his forthcoming Select Oyster Bar in Back Bay, but he's more than happy to contain those grand ideas in a small space.

With four two-top tables, a communal table for eight to 10 people near the front window and 16 seats at the bar, Select will have an intimate feel when it opens this month, one that Serpa expects to retain even when a three-season private back patio adds a couple dozen seats in a few months.

"I think Back Bay has some of those small, personal restaurants, but not quite enough. It fits in well with little tiny store, little tiny hair salon, little tiny coffee shop. Little tiny restaurant," Serpa explains. "When you're in a big restaurant with 20 people, you're like: 'This place is dead.' When you're in our restaurant with 20 people, you'll think, 'Oh, there must be something going on.'"

The advantages of going small entail more than just building buzz. Serpa, the former executive chef of Neptune Oyster, is most excited about the flexibility it will lend to his menu. Instead of needing 50 units of a product, he says he'll be content with five. And it's how he's serving that product that he hopes will help Select stand apart from the many quality seafood restaurants that have opened in Boston during the past decade.

"What all those places have in common is they're based on the New England clam shack thing, with fried clams, lobster rolls, chowder," Serpa says. "I want to go away from that. I just want to cook fish and focus on more Mediterranean-type flavors and stuff you'd see in Spain, North Africa, Italy and France."

That means chowder is out, and in its place is billi bi soup with mussels, leeks and egg yolk. The frequently changing menu will be split into starters such as grilled bacalao and mains such as scallops with carrot puree, chanterelles and kale. True to its name, Select will have a raw bar section, including ceviche and six types of oysters.

To accompany all the seafood, Serpa is offering a wine program that's heavily focused on whites, with more than 20 by-the-glass offerings as well as carafe picks. Small-batch spirits will be the centerpiece of the cocktail program, with many drinks, such as the Green Issac's Special (coconut water, gin, lime juice and bitters), pulled from the works of Serpa's favorite author, Ernest Hemingway.

It's one of many personal touches from Serpa, who picked out everything from the pressed white tin ceiling to the handcrafted tables he found through a Winchester carpenter. "This is what I'd want in my house," he says. "I have more creative freedom in areas that I never did before."

But one thing is still exactly the same. Serpa says: "I'm dying to start cooking."

A FRENCH CONNECTION

FRANCOPHILE: Gosselin's Josephine will focus on lighter French fare.

TO HEAR HIM SPEAK, YOU WOULD think Samuel Gosselin has spent much of his life preparing to open Josephine, a restaurant/wine bar that will replace Kenmore Square's Petit Robert Bistro.

"I always cooked. I always host dinners at my place," says the French native, who wants to bring the same convivial spirit of hospitality to his first restaurant. Originally, the concept was a small wine bar, possibly set in South Boston. But after talking to Petit Robert owner Loic Le Garrec, he decided to change his plans in order to accommodate the 96-seat, two-level spot. He quickly hired chef Stefano Quaresima, whom he considers just the right fit, with his "very traditional European training," including two years at Tour d'Argent in Paris. "He's an Italian chef, someone who can marry butter and oil," he adds. "We share the same vision."

The vision, he says, will be a "lighter" take on traditional French fare. He's also working with a French company to build a balanced wine list that will "open people's palates to new experiences." The extensive renovations will reduce the number of seats to 76 and result in a feeling that's "more casual, a little more warm atmosphere than the traditional bistro," according to Gosselin. As for an opening date, he says, "Early April is a safe bet."

THE HYDE ROAD...

AFTER 10 YEARS OF SERVING ITALIAN FARE IN Roslindale, two of the three owners of the well-regarded Sophia's Grotto plan to open a second restaurant, this time in Hyde Park. The husband-and-wife team of Sonia and Joe Garufi will open Antonio's Bacaro in the old Dotty's Diner in Cleary Square. Joe is working on designing the space, which will feature tin ceilings, a bar, a dining room that will seat about 50 people and a "little hidden wine garden patio." It's slated to open in May with a full liquor license and an Italian menu that ranges from small plates to full dinners.

GET SMASHED: Toomey's take on the popular cocktail offers a taste of spring.

Drink of the Moment
SMASH

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Bulleit Rye, Domaine de Canton, lemon juice, mint

TASTE: Bartender Moira Toomey punches up a whiskey smash with ginger liqueur, lending touches of spice and sweetness. "There's a warmness," she says, "but it's also refreshing," making it a fine option during the so-over-winter, not-quite-spring months. Plus, the easygoing taste works for those who aren't necessarily bourbon drinkers but want to test the waters.

PAIR IT WITH: Charred octopus ($14), served with a lemon-garlic aioli.

WITH A TWIST: Sharing digs with District Hall and neighbor to a host of other inventive spaces, Gather looks to its Innovation District surroundings for inspiration. "We try to keep up with the neighborhood," Toomey says. This means experimenting with creative twists on classics, plus a menu that nods to the nearby ICA with a specialty cocktail that rotates seasonally. (Pro tip: Museum members can score a free appetizer.)

AN IRISH EYE

Bill Brett has filled four other books with his photos of Boston and its people, but the latest really hits home for the longtime Boston Globe photographer, the son of parents from County Sligo, Ireland. Featuring short profiles written by Carol Beggy, plus a foreword by historian David McCullough, Boston Irish collects more than 250 of Brett's black-and-white images of Kennedys, Wahlbergs, Dropkick Murphys and multiple mayors, as well as lesser-known pillars of the Irish community, from priests, police officers and pub owners to this stylish centenarian, Sister Evelyn Hurley, a former teacher who turns 100 this month. "She just caught my eye when I saw her walking on Broadway a couple years ago," Brett recalls. "I asked her, 'Where did you ever find a coat like that?' and she said, 'I made it.'" Brett thought it was time to properly preserve stories like Hurley's—and pay homage to another inspiring woman. "I decided to dedicate it to my mother because she was an immigrant like all those other immigrant mothers, who all had the same stories, went through the same problems," Brett says. "And I thought this was the time to thank her." / Meghan Kavanaugh

AMEN! Sister Evelyn Hurley caught the eye of Bill Brett.

DIRECT HIT

After a Tony-winning run starring in Kinky Boots, Billy Porter is stepping out of the spotlight and into the director's chair, helming the much-anticipated revival of George C. Wolfe's 1987 comedy The Colored Museum for the Huntington Theatre Company. We spoke with the powerhouse entertainer about the show, which runs through April 5. / Alexandra Cavallo

HOW DOES DIRECTING COMPARE TO ACTING? It's a little bit different because I'm in control of everything. And being a Virgo, and being a control freak, it's fun to exercise that control freak muscle.

WHAT DOES THIS PLAY MEAN TO YOU? My drama teacher gave it to me, when I was looking for audition monologues for college. There's a black gay character in the piece, and it was really the first time I'd ever experienced seeing someone who looked like me who wasn't a tragic figure, or the butt of the joke, or an abomination, or whatever it was. So it was really transformative for me because it gave me a hope that who I was was OK. And it also started the relationship that I had with George C. Wolfe, which I had on my own. It was completely one-sided, for about 20 years [laughs].

THE PLAY WAS SO IMPORTANT AT ITS TIME, BUT MANY OF THE ISSUES ARE JUST AS RELEVANT TODAY... The more things change, the more they stay the same. We were just talking with the cast about how profound the ideas and the themes in this piece are, and how it still resonates. We have come a long way, and I feel very blessed to be living in this time where the possibility of change, and the right kind of equality, is right at our fingertips. But simultaneously that's when the resistance is the worst. The fight is not over, and I think that's what this play is about. It's about reminding people that we can't be complacent... that the unification of the struggle is in the embracing of it, and the celebration of it.

IT'S EASY TO BECOME COMPLACENT, UNFORTUNATELY. Yeah! Like, oh, we have a black president, so there's no racism anymore! Oh, well, OK [laughs].

HEAR HER ROAR

HARVARD HISTORY PROF AND NEW YORKER SCRIBE JILL LEPORE GIVES THE STORY BEHIND A SUPERHEROINE.

The Secret History of Wonder Woman* by Jill Lepore
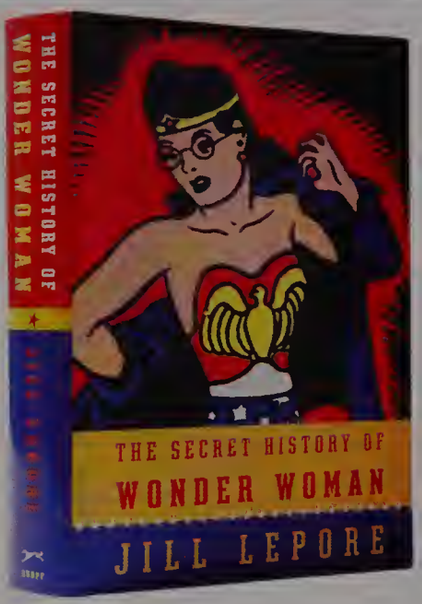
Published by Knopf, 432 pages, $30



INTERESTINGLY, IT WAS A MAN WHO CONCEIVED Wonder Woman. Creator William Marston was a quirky psychologist and lawyer who taught at Tufts, consulted in Hollywood and delivered feminist declarations about women's rights and superior strengths. He also developed the lie detector test—fascinating, given the elaborate lies in his domestic life this book reveals.

With his actual wife, Elizabeth Holloway, Marston had two children. Then Olive Byrne, niece of radical birth control advocate Margaret Sanger, bore him two more, claiming an imaginary man as their father. They all lived together, and the truth of the trio's cozy arrangement was, incredibly, kept secret. In one almost-amusing deception, Byrne actually interviewed Marston for Family Circle, at their own home, pretending they'd never met!

In 1942, the Wonder Woman comic introduced a ferociously bold Amazon, wielding a magic lasso and blazing with assertions about women's power. Lepore notes inspirations for her style, like the theatrical rebelliousness of Sanger, who, when banned from lecturing in Boston, appeared on stage gagged while a statement was read on her behalf: "It silences me, but it makes millions of others talk."

Wonder Woman often appears in bondage, too. Sometimes she's powerfully snapping off chains labeled "man's superiority," "prejudice" and "prudery," while at other times her shackles seem to represent love bonds in a decidedly kinky spirit. Peppered with panels from the comics, Lepore's story whirls about, weird and wonderful.

THAI ONE ON

SOUTHEASTERN PROMISES OF PARADISE AWAIT IN THE PROVINCE OF KRABI.

In the 1974 James Bond film The Man with The Golden Gun, Roger Moore and a villain engage in a pistol duel in an absolutely stunning location: an island in the Southern Thai province of Krabi on the Andaman Sea. And while it's true that this mountainous area has developed significantly since Bond's visit, Krabi still offers an unspoiled mix of lush jungles, limestone karsts and white coral beaches overlooking 130 islands scattered across crystalline waters.

If you've never been to Thailand, now may be the time. With the political situation stabilized and a new "Discover Thainess" campaign encouraging tourism, you'll find constant warm weather, stunning geography, spicy Thai food unlike anything in Boston and an incredible value for the dollar.

Of course, first you have to get to Krabi—a long haul from Boston. But you can break up the trip as I did by flying 13 hours to Tokyo and then another 7 hours on to Bangkok, where it's worth spending at least the night. The city has a burgeoning art scene, along with great restaurants, bars, shopping and luxury hotels, like Tower Club at Lebua, where you can stay in the Hangover Suite—a setting for scenes in The Hangover Part II—before taking the quick 90-minute flight down to Krabi the next day.

Once there, one of the nicest places to stay is Phulay Bay, a sumptuous Ritz-Carlton Reserve resort with just 54 villas nestled on 50 acres of landscaped gardens overlooking that white coral beach. Thai architect Lek Bunnag designed the one-of-a-kind property with exteriors featuring local and sustainable materials, like teak and stone, along with stucco in hues of royal purple and apricot. The interior of each temple-like villa combines cream terrazzo, polished teak and Lanna Thai art (picture women dancing in silk tops and pantaloons). Oversized beds, soaking tubs and expansive patio lounge beds exude luxury and comfort, while ocean views, private pools and hidden outdoor baths and showers connect guests with nature, but in a highly private way.

After a dramatic welcome from the staff in the temple-like pavilion, you'll meet your personal butler, who will attend to your every whim during your stay. Want a hot moonlit bath with floating orchids? Done. How about a private seaplane tour of the region? Check. This young man or woman is always available, but never intrusive.

While it's tempting to spend all your time lounging by the infinity pool, the resort has too many Instagram-worthy adventures to ignore. You can take a private speedboat to a remote island and snorkel along the powdery beaches before picnicking on prawn and lemongrass salad. Or kayak through quiet mangroves under the curious eyes of tiny honey-brown monkeys. Or, if you're among the CrossFit set, hike up Naga Mountain with one of the resort's guides, then unwind in the Phulay Bay Spa with a four-handed massage (we're talking two attendants, friends).

As for eats, you can get elegant French-influenced cuisine overlooking the water at Lae Lay and steak and pasta at Jampoon, which also has a bountiful breakfast buffet. But you're here for the Thai food—not sweet like many iterations in the States, but pungent with chilies, garlic, galangal and kefir lime leaves and brimming with local vegetables and seafood. The pool bar, Plai Fah (a killer spot for sunset drinks), and the Sri Trang restaurant offer local Thai specialties, including a scrumptious spinach-like green that grows along the road and arrives stir-fried with chilies, garlic and egg. The resort's organic garden produces lemongrass, mint and other herbs that make their way into cocktails, fresh salads and body scrubs at the spa. Foodies can even join the resort's Thai chef on a tour through the nearby Maharaj Market, filled with wild greens, pea-size eggplants, exotic fruits and fish, but virtually devoid of meat, given the area's many vegetarian Buddhists. Back at the resort, learn how to turn those indigenous ingredients into fresh rolls and green papaya salad seasoned with dried shrimp and crunchy peanuts.

Thailand has earned the nickname "The Land of Smiles," and for good reason. No matter where you go, the locals are exceedingly friendly, kind and gracious. And the smiles are contagious. When you're in a place like Krabi that resembles paradise, it's impossible to feel anything but happy. ◆

UN POCO LOCO

LOCO TAQUERIA & OYSTER BAR BOOMS IN OLD SOUTHIE.

LOCO TAQUERIA & OYSTER BAR
412 W. Broadway, Boston (617-917-5626)
locosouthboston.com

South Boston's dining scene keeps evolving at a breathtaking pace. I'm not talking about the touristy Seaport, but the historically residential neighborhoods that run from City Point to the Lower End along the Broadways. A strip that once offered few options beyond dull pub fare, middling pizza and bad American-Chinese food now boasts everything from bagels to sushi, plus a growing number of outposts with siblings in shinier neighborhoods. Loco Taqueria & Oyster Bar, which recently debuted near Perkins Square, is clearly catering to Southie's newer arrivals with more contemporary food and drink than old-timers are used to seeing.

As the name suggests, Loco has one foot planted firmly in the raw bar world, offering a daily selection of fresh, properly shucked raw oysters ($2.50-$3 each). If you're new to raw oysters, oyster escabeche ($8) offers a clever, gentle introduction, topping three Wellfleets with a pretty carmine crown of tuna crudo. Tuna crudo tostada ($14) dresses up its raw fish a bit more with leche de tigre (the classic Peruvian ceviche marinade, mainly lime juice and onions), avocado, lime crema and pickled peppers, with similarly delectable results. Sushi fluke ceviche ($12) is a milder, larger-cut crudo, more subtly flavored with coconut leche de tigre, bits of pickled onion and charred sweet potato, its puffs of savory coconut curd and teensy edible flowers completing a gorgeous, sophisticated plate.

Loco's other dimension is a fusion-y take on Mexican cuisine, with somewhat uneven results. Guacamole ($9) with crispy chili-dusted tortilla chips is admirably fresh and chunky; a version with smoked fish ($12) is a novel, welcome upgrade. On paper, charcoal-grilled street corn ($8) boasts garlic/chili mojo, cotida and espellette pepper; on the plate, it's curiously mild. Papas bravas ($9), fried potato rounds amply dressed in ancho ketchup and garlicky mojo sauce, exhibit what I call the Poutine Problem: a crisp fry job made soggy by sauce. Crispy fried masa ($10) suffers a similar fate. It may have started as a crunchy-edged Mexican take on cubed fried polenta, but heavy toppings of manchego, chimichurri, grilled pineapple and pickled cilantro result in a soft, starchy mish-mash. Spicy duck taquitos ($12) are much better—crunchy, loaded with flavorful duck and punched up with the droll accent of American-Chinese plum sauce.

Tacos plates feature two big, overstuffed double layers of corn tortillas, many filled with ingredient combinations little-seen south of the border. Baja-style fried fish tacos ($12) barely recall their traditional forebears, but their big, crunchy batter-fried white-fish filets stand up well to charred jalapeño/pineapple salsa, pear/ginger slaw and avocado. Lobster tacos ($16) are nicely stuffed with chunks of lobster meat, with chorizo aioli and pickled corn-butter relish providing aptly complementary flavors, but the whole is overwhelmed by overly strong, sweet griddled onions. A special of quail tacos ($10) with white bean hummus, radish and spiced honey jus is the kookiest yet most successful fusion attempt, an effective flavor combination centered on boneless, perfectly cooked, crisp-skinned game bird. Brazilian seafood stew ($24) offers a promising gloss on moqueca: an attractive assortment of lobster, scallops, clams, shrimp, white fish and hearts of palm served dry in a bowl with a pitcher of coconut lobster broth to pour over. That broth has the lovely deep flavor of proper lobster stock but overall is oddly sweet, lacking the acid balance of more traditional versions.

For dessert, churros ($6) boast a silky, expensive-tasting chocolate sauce, but the crullers have the dryness of overfrying or previous cooking and reheating. A concrete ($6) fares better; the chunky frappe features more good chocolate sauce half-stirred in with bits of banana.

Once the older patrons that dine early depart, Loco turns into a lively, singles-centric saloon for Southie's 20- and early-30-something professionals. Cocktail options include El Jefe ($9), the house margarita of El Jimador blanco (a quality budget pure-agave tequila), an unspecified orange liqueur, lime juice and agave syrup. It's fresh-tasting, but the tequila flavor is muted. Specialty cocktails like El Tonto ($10), a mix of mezcal, lime juice, grenadine and ginger beer, are similarly less-than-strong: It's a wan mezcal cocktail in which smoke flavor barely registers. Drinkers looking for more potent potables should consider the admirable 30-strong list of tequilas and nine single-village mezcals (most $8-$12). Back that shot with similarly nice-priced beers (all $5-$6) from a list with eight drafts, four macro domestics, 10 mostly Mexican imports and two ciders. Wines run cheap and cheerful, with by-the-glass options at $8-$11.

Recalling sibling Lincoln Tavern across the street, the large, high-ceilinged room is stripped down to its bare-brick bones, and most of the action is centered on a big central bar, here U-shaped and festively decorated with many tiny globe lights. As at Lincoln, those hard surfaces become unforgiving as the room gets full: The steady, 90-decibel roar requires you to shout to your companions and server to be heard. Those servers are unfailingly, casually friendly and attentive; you can blame the room, not them, for the occasional misheard order. That currently fashionable cacophony may turn off patrons accustomed to conversing without screaming. But for its younger, carefully targeted New Old Southie demographic, Loco's formula—thunderous atmosphere, a novel yet unchallenging menu and, above all, affordable good drinks—is already panning out as a can't-miss combination. ◆

Q: MY FACE IS A LITTLE FLAT AND HOLLOW-LOOKING AND I WOULD LOVE TO HAVE BIGGER CHEEKS; WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND?

A: Fullness can certainly be added to your cheeks using special fillers that are designed for the upper face, such as Juvederm Voluma. Flat or sunken cheeks can be caused by heredity, weight-loss, medical issues or aging.

Voluma is a safe and effective hyaluronic filler that is injected along the cheekbones and/or in the apple of the cheek to add volume. The injections are not painful, the results are very natural-looking, and will last for up to two years.

Your cheeks will instantly look fuller in a subtle, natural way. Voluma is also a great way for men and women to instantly look a few years younger.

ENCHANTING ELLA

DISNEY'S LATEST LIVE-ACTION RETELLING IS THE FAIREST OF THEM ALL.

DISNEY'S BANKING ON AUDIENCES SHOWING up for director Kenneth Branagh's live-action remake of Cinderella, the animated hit that brought the studio back from the brink of closure in 1950. However, it's the promise of returning to the world of 2013's Frozen, the two-time Oscar winner that earned more than $400 million at the box office, that'll guarantee asses in seats.

The feature film is preceded by a screening of Frozen Fever, a new 7-minute animated short that focuses on Kristoff (voice of Jonathan Groff) and Olaf (Josh Gad) as they prepare a birthday party for Anna (Kristen Bell) while Elsa (Adele Dazeem, err, Idina Menzel) suffers through her first-ever cold. Every time the Ice Queen sneezes, an increasing amount of mini snowmen appear—picture chilled versions of Despicable Me's minions crossed with the multiplying brooms of The Sorcerer's Apprentice, and you have some idea of the crowd-pleasing antics you're in for.

But like most follow-ups, this short is a letdown. So, how nice that the main event is such a pleasure to sit through! While not a musical retelling (which might disappoint some Disneyphiles), it's nevertheless a worthy tribute to the classic.

Like most fairy tales, this one begins with the words "Once upon a time," as we're introduced to a little blond girl named Ella (Eloise Webb). She's not a princess, but her family's property serves as her magical kingdom. Her beloved father (Ben Chaplin) travels as a merchant, frequently bringing gifts home for his cherished little girl. Alas, magic can't last forever, and her mother (Hayley Atwell) comes down with a terminal case of Disney Mother Disease. "Have courage and be kind," the woman tells her daughter with her dying breath.

A decade or so later, Ella (now played by Downton Abbey's Lily James) needs vast reserves of courage and kindness to deal with her new stepmother, Lady Tremaine (Cate Blanchett), and her unpleasant stepsisters, Anastasia (Holliday Grainger) and Drizella (Sophie McShera). All three are incredibly pale, which stands in stark contrast to their extravagantly loud clothes (costume designer Sandy Powell may have already sewn up next year's Oscar).

Remembering her mother's words, Ella politely offers her massive bedroom to her stepsisters—and is banished to the dusty old (but nevertheless huge) attic as thanks. Sadly, Ella's dad dies during his next trip, making an orphan out of our enchanting heroine as her stepfamily turns her into their housemaid and dubs her "Cinderella."

While not a musical retelling ... it's nevertheless a worthy tribute to the classic.

This is a mostly faithful adaptation, but during one of screenwriter Chris Weitz's original flourishes, our would-be princess meets her Prince Charming (Game of Thrones' Richard Madden) before the grand ball (which still serves as a delightful centerpiece in this stunningly photographed movie). Fleeing the harassment at home for a brief respite in the surrounding forest, she encounters a handsome stranger, interrupting his hunt. He doesn't seem to mind.

After she convinces him not to slaughter any animals, he introduces himself—more or less. "They call me Kit," he tells her. "I live at the castle. My father's teaching me his trade."

"So, you're an apprentice," Ella concludes—without divulging so much as her name. (Have to keep a guy coming back for more!)

"Of a sort," he says, flashing the whitest teeth you've ever seen in a world without toothpaste. Arriving back at that castle, this "apprentice" barely conceals his excitement from his father, the king (Branagh's mentor and regular repertory player Derek Jacobi), who will soon fall prey to Disney Father Disease. But first Kit convinces his father to open that exclusive ball—where the prince will choose his betrothed—to every woman in the kingdom, social standing be damned.

However, Lady Tremaine is determined to keep Ella from attending, even if it requires that she viciously tear the dress the young beauty plans on wearing—a dress that once belonged to her real mother. "It would ruin my daughters' prospects to see them arrive at the ball with a ragged servant girl," Ella's stepmother tells the teary-eyed girl as Anastasia and Drizella share a heartless laugh.

Blanchett is a standout in a stellar cast that brings life to the familiar tale. And of Disney's live-action remakes and reconfigurations of its cartoon classics, this is the most reverential of the animated source material. Whereas Maleficent upended 1959's Sleeping Beauty, telling the story from the perspective of the ostensibly misunderstood villain, Branagh and Weitz have kept the blueprint mostly intact. However, two-time Oscar winner Blanchett has wisely sidestepped the traditional "wicked" aspect in favor of a moderately more modern interpretation—that of a hardened woman pushed into a corner, a mother who's doing what she must to provide for her daughters and survive in a man's world.

Helena Bonham Carter amusingly appears as Ella's fairy godmother, complete with gifts of glass slippers and magical powers over pumpkins. And the former charming prince—now newly crowned king—shows up at Lady Tremaine's doorstep during his massive manhunt to locate the mystery girl he danced with before she fled, leaving a glass slipper behind.

Seemingly every woman in this multicultural kingdom has tried on the crystalline pump, so it's not surprising that Lady Tremaine attempts to stop her stepdaughter from slipping her perfectly fitting foot inside. What is surprising, however, is that Ella's stepmother is the only woman in the land not to try on the specialized footwear. A cultured woman who made the mistake of marrying down in the hopes of providing stability for her family, and she doesn't even try to claim a place as the new queen? This is a fairy tale! ◆

FRONT AND BACK

A GRAMMY WINNER AND BACKUP VIRTUOSO FINDS HER COMFORT ZONE.

ANYONE WHO HAS CAUGHT A ROLLING Stones concert in the past 25 years should remember Lisa Fischer, at least for going toe-to-toe with Mick Jagger to ignite "Gimme Shelter." Fischer's steady Stones gig highlights her career as an A-list backup vocalist, a track record that earned her a featured role in 20 Feet from Stardom, an Oscar-winning 2013 documentary on those stars in the shadows.

So it's not surprising that Fischer dips into that Stones catalog when she performs with her band, Grand Baton. However, Fischer bends every song to her own genre-blurring whims, caressing each phrase with pinpoint subtleties and dynamics. And then she drops more unexpected choices, like Led Zeppelin's "Rock and Roll."

Unlike Jagger, Robert Plant could flat-out wail, but Fischer's soulful reinvention of that song over a slinky Caribbean-jazz groove can astound, especially when she leans toward an echoey second microphone to spin the word "lonely" into the stratosphere.

"It's like playing with clay," Fischer explains from New York with a dreamy, childlike cadence. "There are no rules. It's like we have so many rules to live by all the time. It's just so freeing and so refreshing for the soul. It's playing. Not worrying. Trust the moment and just share that trust with everyone. It's so fun for me."

Indeed, Fischer exudes a Zen-like sincerity and appreciation for what she does. Her warmth on the bandstand during a sold-out, four-show December stint at Scullers Jazz Club made everyone in the room feel like an old friend, while her Facebook page reveals a personalized reply to nearly every fan's comment.

"I'm just thankful I get to sing anywhere," says Fischer, who returns to play the Wilbur Theatre on April 5, as well as Northampton's Calvin Theatre on March 31 and the Newport Jazz Festival on Aug. 1.

Much of her current appeal could be attributed to 20 Feet from Stardom, which profiled Fischer and peers such as Merry Clayton (who recorded "Gimme Shelter" with the Stones) and Darlene Love. "It's allowed me a second chance, a second life, a second chance at a life—because I'm getting up there," says Fischer, 56. "Even though in my mind, I don't feel like an age, the time is ticking. Your body changes and things change, so I can't be the rocker chick that I was at 27."

"It's just so freeing and so refreshing for the soul. It's playing. Not worrying."

Actually, at that age, Fischer was an R&B/soul chick, enjoying her big break as a backup singer for mentor Luther Vandross. "He cared so much about every single aspect of what he was presenting to the audience," she says. Fischer broke from the background to release a 1991 solo album, So Intense, yielding the Grammy-winning No. 1 R&B hit "How Can I Ease the Pain," which she still performs.

Yet Fischer never finished a follow-up amid questions of direction. She returned to supportive jobs, performing with Tina Turner, Sting, Chris Botti and Nine Inch Nails, in addition to the Stones. "It's like sewing together a beautiful quilt and feeling like I'm a part of the thread," she says. "I love that role, and it's always exciting to watch [those artists] blossom." She doesn't yearn to run the show.

"There are so many people that really desire and need and have a vision to be in that place," Fischer says. "I've had the gift of having a [record] deal. Then being able to record music with so many wonderful people—and have people react to it—was a gift... The mistake would have been daydreaming about doing a record again."

Partly because the acts that she mainly works with haven't been recording either, Fischer has focused on the stage. "That's what's most present and real to me at the moment," the singer says. And she's found empathetic foils in Grand Baton guitarist/director JC Maillard, drummer Thierry Arpino and bassist Aidan Carroll.

"They know how to listen and toss the ball back and hold hands," Fischer says. "You feel it, but it's not something that they speak. They just are. That was the most important thing for me, just having the right energies around me." ◆

MIAMI EAT

IT'S CURIOUSLY HARD TO GET DRUNK OR FULL AT A WINE AND FOOD FEST.

THERE IS A DIFFERENCE BETWEEN enjoying food and being a foodie. And if you have any doubt about where you fall on the food-appreciation spectrum, I have an easy litmus test: Go to the South Beach Wine and Food Festival. I just got back and I'm still testing positive for foie gras and gout. If you sliced my finger, cabernet would pour out. I don't want to seem like I'm complaining, given that you're probably reading this on your morning commute while mushing your sled dogs, but stuffing your face in Miami turns out to be more challenging than you'd expect.

The first night, you walk into a vast conference room where there seems to be about a thousand booths proffering food or drink. They hand you a wine glass with a lanyard, the purpose of which becomes clear the moment you find yourself with a plate and a splash of vino—congratulations, you've got glutton's handcuffs. The solution is to hang your glass around your neck like a mare's feedbag, except instead of oats you have a half-ounce of the 2011 malbec. You might think the Riedel amulet makes you look like a tool, but I assure you, it makes you look like a giant tool.

We're there early, but already the joint is shoulder-to-shoulder with Miami's most discerning food snobs, lined up so deep you'd think some of the booths were giving out free plastic surgery. Those who aren't waiting in line tend to wander aimlessly from table to table in search of the next plate, the Walking Fed. Arrrr! Brains! Or actually, pancreas. I wolf down a plate of sweetbreads before Googling "What are sweetbreads?" Hint: Sweetbreads are neither sweet, nor bread.

Over the next two hours, I eat some amazing things. I just can't tell you what they were, because it's all a blur of tiny plates and swigs of wine. I eat and drink all night, yet never get full or drunk because each portion and each pour is tiny. I know they plan it that way so that you can try lots of different things, but I'm still sort of hoping I discover some secret room where they hand you a whole burger and a pint of IPA.

The next day is more of the same, arranged beneath tents on the beach. Now there's hard liquor and a Hard Rock Cafe, complete with dancing bikini girls atop a platform near the entrance. It's safe to say the daytime event has a trashier vibe, which is A-OK with me. As before, custom seems to dictate that you pretend to be really interested in everything you're eating and drinking. You swish your wine around and say, "Oh, 2013? That was a good year for wine. I'll try that." Then you pound your sip of wine and storm off to the next booth to repeat the charade.

Strangely, many of the restaurants seem to be serving uncharacteristic items—the Sushi Samba booth is slinging pork skewers. Come on, Sushi Samba. I came to the Skynyrd concert, I wanna hear "Free Bird." Now where's that tuna belly?

Eventually you reach a moment of reckoning. You realize that you've been swigging booze on the beach and the diuretics are kicking in. You've got to find the bathrooms, and mankind has yet to hold an outdoor festival that has satisfactory bathroom facilities. If you're going to a festival in a foreign land, the first phrase you should learn is "Are you done in there?"

Then you pound your sip of wine and storm off to the next booth...

Indeed, the toilets are where the festival's thin veneer of civility falls apart. You fought for that wine, buddy, and you're gonna fight to get rid of it, too. There are two classy porta-potties, the ones that look like nice little movie-star dressing rooms, flanked by about 20 of the plastic nasty kind that accurately recreate the smell of a medieval Viking dungeon. Naturally, there is no line for the latter. And also no line for the men's star trailer. So my wife, Heather, says, "Screw it, I'm just using that one," and walks right up to the men's trailer. "You go, girl!" shouts one of the Hard Rock go-go dancers over in the women's line.

But Heather quickly realizes that she's misjudged, assuming the bathroom was a one-hitter. Instead, she opens the door to find a row of urinals and two stalls, both occupied. There's a line of dudes crowded just inside the door, waiting for the stalls. She gives up and heads over to the Viking dungeons.

However, Hard Rock Girl follows Heather's lead to the men's room, and as I'm standing at the urinal I hear her behind me pleading with a guy who's waiting for a stall. "I'll be quick!" she says. "I just have to pee!" He replies, "Well, I'm gonna crap my pants!" Welcome to high society.

So, am I a foodie? Given that I walked straight off the beach in search of pizza, I guess not. But I do enjoy wearing my wine glass. Sometimes a burger needs two hands. ◆

Soroff On / Tess Gerritsen

MURDER, SHE WROTE

THE PHYSICIAN-TURNED-AUTHOR TALKS ABOUT CREEPY FANS, HER WRITING PROCESS AND LOVING THE MACABRE.

BEST-SELLING AUTHOR TESS GERRITSEN, 61, WAS RAISED IN California and graduated from Stanford before attending medical school at UC San Francisco. While on maternity leave from her work as a physician, she began writing fiction, publishing her first novel in 1987. She wrote eight more romantic thrillers before releasing her first medical thriller in 1996. She has since published 17 more, all set in Boston, selling more than 30 million copies worldwide. Dubbed "the medical suspense queen" by Publishers Weekly, she has won numerous awards, written screenplays and had her novels adapted into the TNT television series Rizzoli & Isles. Her latest novel, Die Again, was released in December. She lives in Maine.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So have you always had a morbid streak or fascination with the grisly?
TESS GERRITSEN: It's my mom's fault. She was an immigrant from China and didn't understand English, so what she did was watch a lot of horror films. I spent my childhood screaming in movie theaters and getting used to the feeling that entertainment and fear were intertwined.

Favorite forensics TV show? I don't watch a lot of TV. The only show I watch faithfully is The Big Bang Theory.

Not Rizzoli & Isles? Well, of course.

Who would you have cast for those characters? Before the show started, I had two people in mind. For Jane Rizzoli, Marisa Tomei, and for Maura Isles, Catherine Zeta-Jones. I always saw Maura as a goth version of Catherine Zeta-Jones.

What do you think it is about crime fiction that captures the imagination? It's a rehearsal for everything bad that could possibly happen. I'm afraid of a lot of things. Everyone is. Crime fiction allows us to imagine how we would get out of those situations.

So do you think it's therapeutic? I do think crime fiction is therapeutic. Horror is therapeutic. Anything scary is therapeutic, as long as there's a happy ending.

Is it weird when you're in an airport and you see somebody buying one of your books? It's not weird. It's really thrilling. I'd be more worried if it wasn't there or nobody wanted it.

Has a physical object ever inspired the premise for a book? No, but a bad dream has. In fact, the book I'm working on now is based on a nightmare I had in Venice. I had too much wine to drink that night, and I dreamt I was playing my violin. There was a baby next to me, and the baby's eyes glowed red—it turned into a monster. So my book is about a violinist who picks up a mysterious piece of music in an antique store in Rome. Every time she plays it, her 3-year-old daughter turns violent. So the question is: What is wrong with this music? Why is it haunting this family? So she has to dig into its history. Every parent's worst nightmare is that they're terrified of their own child. This story weaves back into the Italian Holocaust.

"I'm afraid of a lot of things. Everyone is. Crime fiction allows us to imagine how we would get out of those situations."

Your books have been translated into 35 languages. Strangest one you've seen? We just had one come out in Azerbaijan. That's pretty exotic.

Something about forensics people would be surprised to know? One trick a pathologist told me was that to clip ribs, she uses heavy garden shears. Of all the stuff they buy, most of it is off the shelf for other purposes. Butcher knives. Rose clippers...

Ever had a creepy fan encounter? [Laughs] Oh, yeah. All the time. But the creepiest one was when I wrote a book called The Surgeon about a serial killer who cuts out women's organs before he kills them. I'm on tour, and a normal-looking man came to get his book signed. He whispered in my ear, "Thank you for writing this book." I said, "Why?" And he said, "You let me enjoy my fantasies." Then he took his book and walked out.

Did you report that to the police? No. He hadn't done anything. He just had fantasies. That's not a crime. But it's a reminder that there are people out there you don't really want to get too close to.

Are doctors unfairly schooled in life's harsh realities? I think doctors are on the front lines of life's harsh realities. Medicine is a noble profession, even though doctors are often cast as villains. Yes, they're arrogant. They're know-it-alls. But they take care of people from all walks of life, from the very rich to the very poor. Outside of cops, how many people can say that?

Thing you miss the most about practicing medicine? Hearing people's stories. That was the best part.

Do you have a writing routine? I have a bizarre practice of writing my first draft with pen in longhand, on unlined typing paper. It has to be unlined. If there are lines, it kind of screws me up.

Do you work a story from beginning to end or the other way around? I know about the first third. Then, when I get to that point, I figure it out. I can see a little way ahead of me, but I really don't know how it's going to end, except for the imperative that the bad guy is going to get his comeuppance.

Real-life mystery you'd most like to solve? Right now? I'd like to know what happened with the Malaysian jet that went down. The one that vanished.

Film you love? I'd go back to the horror films of my youth, because they continue to haunt me as an adult. The number-one most disturbing psychological thriller that I remember watching with my mom was the original black-and-white version of Invasion of the Body Snatchers. I don't know why. I don't remember there being any violence. But it was unsettling, particularly for a child, because it's about people you love and care about who go to sleep, and when they wake up, they're not them anymore. And nobody believes you. For a child, that's particularly scary—the idea that Mommy becomes an alien. For me, it was a metaphor for alienation between people who love each other.

If you had to be, how would you want to be murdered? Oh, with a nice overdose of some incredibly wonderful drug. ◆

METRO BOSTON'S GENRE-BENDING GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND INAUGURAL FESTING

AGENDA for 3/11-3/24

Listen Up

A new music fest is in session.

FOR NEARLY 80 YEARS, the Celebrity Series has brought diverse talents to Boston, from classical prodigies to experimental dance troupes. And while many programs lean toward the finer arts, the nonprofit has an innovative edge. Case in point: Stave Sessions, a new weeklong music festival featuring an eclectic bill of up-and-coming young artists who are channeling their classical training into creative outlets. That includes Ben Sollee (pictured), who blends classical and blues on his vintage cello named Kay, a steadfast companion on the eco-minded musician's cross-country bike tours. Catch him and the rest of the Stave Sessions lineup in a cabaret setting (complete with specialty cocktails) in Berklee's newest building on March 15-21. / Alexandra Cavallo Stave Sessions runs March 15-21 at Berklee's 160 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-482-6661) celebrityseries.org. $20-$35.

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

CHILD'S PLAY Those who prefer their fairy tales more Grimm than Disney should enjoy Company One's Shockheaded Peter. The dark comedic musical is an adaptation of Struwwelpeter, a 19th-century German children's book in which kiddies who misbehave meet rather unpleasant ends. (Think: a thumb-sucking child who loses said appendage to a scissor-happy tailor.) The Olivier Award winner features a score from cult Brit cabaret trio the Tiger Lillies, reimagined for this New England premiere production by local steamcrunk titans Walter Sickert & the Army of Broken Toys. Don't expect to hear any lullabies at the Modern Theatre, where the twisted bedtime story plays through April 4. / Alexandra Cavallo

UNSAFE SEX And you thought your last hook-up was a mistake. A casual sexual encounter leads to a very serious haunting in David Robert Mitchell's It Follows, an indie horror flick about a strange summer fling that goes awry when a young woman named Jay contracts an STD—a sexually transmitted demon, that is—from Hugh. Relentlessly haunted by the phantom, Jay and her friends must confront the nameless, faceless terror that seems hell-bent on keeping them from making it to their 20s. Find yourself considering the merits of abstinence when It Follows screens at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on March 20 and 21. / Kyle Grace Mills

Reviews by Brett Michel

'71 ★★★1/2 British actor Jack O'Connell sure can take a punch. Angelina Jolie put him through a fair share of beatings as a World War II-era POW in Unbroken; now freshman director Yann Demange damages the 24-year-old's handsome face even more in this tense drama. The year is 1971, and U.K. Pvt. Gary Hook (O'Connell) and his regiment have been dispatched to Belfast to help control the deteriorating situation on the streets. Unprepared for the level of violence they encounter, Hook's unit is ambushed in a chaotic riot, and they accidentally abandon him when they're forced to retreat in the face of gunfire. After witnessing the horror of a comrade being executed at point-blank range, Hook barely escapes with his life, and he's forced to survive a terrifying night alone, dodging not only bullets and bombs, but political and military corruption. O'Connell was stone-faced and stoic under the direction of Jolie, but Demange coaxes a raw anguish from the lad that drags you into his painful predicament, making you cringe as he's broken, both physically and mentally. Backed by a pulse-pounding score courtesy of Belfast-born DJ David Holmes, this is a superb directorial debut. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

American Sniper ★★★ We've grown used to Bradley Cooper as a comic performer, but director Clint Eastwood recognized something deeper. We first view Cooper's Chris Kyle as he's staring down the scope of his sniper rifle at his target: an Iraqi boy holding a grenade. As Chris trains his sights on this young killer, who can't be more than 7 or 8 years old, Eastwood cuts to Chris as a child in Texas, shooting a deer during an inaugural hunt with his dad. "That was one hell of a shot," Wayne Kyle (Ben Reed) tells his son. "You got a gift." That gift leads Chris to become a Navy SEAL. Called for service on the day he weds Taya (Sienna Miller, strong in an underwritten, weepy role), he heads for a solitary honeymoon in Iraq, where his bullet will rip through that grenade-wielding child's chest. This will stand as the first of an unmatched 160 confirmed kills across four tours of duty, earning Chris the nickname "The Legend," as Cooper subtly projects the effects of PTSD. While the adaptation of Kyle's autobiography has taken heat as an endorsement of 'Merica's war machine, this is Eastwood at his most apolitical, no matter what chair he prefers talking to. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Fifty Shades of Grey ★1/2 Although Dakota Johnson is certainly admired by director Sam Taylor-Johnson's camera in this adaptation of author E.L. James' BDSM fantasy, nudity is rarely this unerotic. Johnson's virginal Anastasia Steele interviews 27-year-old billionaire Christian Grey (Jamie Dornan) for her college paper; then he shows up at her part-time hardware store job, seeking rope, tape and cable ties, prompting her to wonder if he's a serial killer. If only. Previously, Dornan was best known for playing a multiple murderer in the BBC series The Fall, but he's the real stiff here. "I'm not the man for you," Christian eventually tells the lovestruck Ana—and it's hard to argue with him, since Dornan and Johnson's onscreen chemistry is nil. Johnson does have comic chops, though this film isn't the laugh riot I expected, so those chops are mostly wasted. Ana herself gets a bit wasted in a bar before drunk-dialing Christian—but what college-aged girl would phone anyone? It's a texting culture, something James would know if she were interested in capturing believable interactions, rather than presenting a dominant/submissive relationship that would make actual BDSM practitioners turn red—not from a good spanking, but from embarrassment. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Focus ★★1/2 This love story between two professional liars and cheats might leave you feeling conned, especially after such a promising first half. Will Smith brings a lot of charm to his role of master thief Nicky, but it's Margot Robbie as Jess, his new protege, who steals the movie. Co-writers and co-directors Glenn Ficarra and John Requa (I Love You Phillip Morris) lay most of their cards out when they place Nicky in a car with Jess as Noel Harrison sings "The Windmills of Your Mind" on the radio. This Oscar-winning song was the theme of 1968's The Thomas Crown Affair—and Ficarra and Requa wish their movie could be half as entertaining as the Boston-set heist classic. But for a while, it is. Nicky and Jess meet-cute in New York, and their weeklong con games/love affair in New Orleans lead up to the Super Bowl. A tension-filled sequence at the big game finds the two in an escalating gambling match with B.D. Wong's Liyuan, and the payoff is huge. But then, abruptly, the words "Three years later..." appear onscreen, and you feel like your pocket's been picked. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Imitation Game ★★★ Director Morten Tyldum spends so much time setting up complex puzzles that he oversimplifies the life of his central enigma: Alan Turing, a British genius posthumously regarded as a father of the modern computer. Fortunately, Benedict Cumberbatch expertly plays the tortured intellect, who was enlisted to join "half a dozen crossword enthusiasts in a small village in the south of London" racing to crack the supposedly unbreakable Nazi codes of Germany's Enigma machine during World War II. It's Turing's hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle constructed by screenwriter Graham Moore, working from a biography that revealed more about the real

Turing, including how he was fascinated by the scene in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs where the evil queen dips an apple into poison. Turing was sentenced for indecency in '52, and onscreen text informs us of his tragic suicide at the age of 41, a year after beginning government-mandated "chemical castration." It's a very conventional ending to a film about a complex, puzzling life. What we don't see is that Turing died of cyanide poisoning—a half-eaten apple beside him, foam coating his mouth, no prince to save him. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Jupiter Ascending ★ That this latest fantasy adventure from siblings Andy and Lana Wachowski is a disaster should come as little surprise. Originally slated to open in July, it was ostensibly delayed to give the visual effects artists another seven months to perfect their work. But no amount of tinkering could have fixed the Wachowskis' script, or the lack of chemistry between Mila Kunis and Channing Tatum. She's Jupiter Jones, a Russian cleaning woman in Chicago, and he's Caine, a part-canine hunter from space who skates in on anti-gravity boots to save her from death. You see, aliens are bent on killing her before she can claim her place as the reincarnation of a mythical space queen who doubled as the CEO of a corporation that raises and harvests societies throughout the cosmos as fuel for immortality. That's right: The movie's central conceit—that we're all just food for our overlords—is straight out of The Matrix, the Wachowskis' first big hit. Alas, it's been 16 years and two dreadful sequels since that picture, and after failing with adaptations of cartoons (Speed Racer) and novels (Cloud Atlas), they've hit rock bottom with this original, awful take on the young adult genre. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Kingsman: The Secret Service ★★★ Matthew Vaughn reinvigorated Marvel Comics' X-Men for the big screen in 2011's X-Men: First Class, a period piece where he demonstrated an affinity for the swinging '60s, in addition to the command of action filmmaking and editing he'd displayed in 2010's Kick-Ass, his violent, entertaining deconstruction of the modern superhero movie, based on writer Mark Millar's comic book series. Now, Vaughn and regular collaborator Jane Goldman have freely adapted another Millar comic book, 2012's The Secret Service. Although set in the present, this affectionately winking, postmodern take on spy films aims squarely at the James Bond franchise, specifically the 1970s movies, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart. He recruits "Eggsy" (newcomer Taron Egerton), who was Olympic material before he dropped out of the Royal Marines and into a life of petty crime. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Hart tells the lad, and he's not kidding—the designer suits Eggsy's outfitted with are as bulletproof as his ammunition-firing umbrella, and they'll be needed for all the over-the-top action and carnage ahead. If Bond's upper lip has grown too stiff for you, Eggsy's new breed of spy is bound to raise a few eyebrows. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Last Five Years ★★1/2 Anna Kendrick proves once again that she has the singing chops that charmed audiences in Pitch Perfect and Into the Woods, but writer/director Richard LaGravenese fairs about as well as Rob Marshall did when he brought the latter to the screen last year. Opening up Jason Robert Brown's hit musical, LaGravenese isn't granted the hummable tunes that grab fans of Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine's fairy tale theater piece, but he at least has a structure that doesn't grow tiresome at the midway mark. Instead, the middle is the converging point for two storylines—told almost entirely through song—that run in reverse of each other. Kendrick is Cathy Hiatt, a struggling actress whose scenes begin at the end of her marriage and move backward in time to the start of the relationship; Jeremy Jordan (from Joyful Noise and TV's Smash) is Jamie Wellerstein, a successful Jewish novelist who serenades his "shiksa goddess" from the beginning of their affair straight through to their breakup. Their tales intersect when he proposes to Cathy, but alas, even Kendrick can't quite make the material sing, with handheld camera work that oddly distracts from the intimacy. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel ★★ Director John Madden won't be winning any Oscars for this follow-up to his 2011 hit, The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel. However, he and his screenwriter, Ol Parker, should be given credit for their honesty—their sequel certainly is the second best in this series. Without a novel to work from (the first film was based on Deborah Moggach's These Foolish Things), Parker builds his script around the goodwill that audiences have for these characters. However, the absence of Tom Wilkinson's Graham is deeply felt, and bulking up the supporting roles of returning cast members—Ronald Pickup and Diana Hardcastle as Norman and Carol, Celia Imrie as Madge—can't make up for this hole, especially when they're provided with sitcom-style plots. MVP Maggie Smith provides the film's backbone as Muriel; as the newly installed co-manager of the hotel, alongside Dev Patel's Sonny, she's the glue that holds everything together, even if few of the pieces quite fit. Judi Dench and Bill Nighy also bring their immeasurable charms back to their roles of Evelyn and Douglas, but new hotel guests Guy (Richard Gere) and Lavinia (Tamsin Greig) feel like exactly what this film is: filler. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Song of the Sea ★★★★ You know those remarkably stylized animated end credits that are a Pixar specialty? The sequences that appear to be handcrafted, unlike the hyper-realistic computer-generated wonders that preceded them? If you're lucky enough to have seen director Tomm Moore's Academy Award-nominated The Secret of Kells, then you're aware that entire feature films can be hand-animated in a similar style. Now Moore is back, five years later, with his latest Oscar-nominated animated masterpiece. Based on the Irish legend of the selkies—seals that transform into humans while on land—Song of the Sea tells the tale of 6-year-old seal-child Saoirse. She and older brother Ben escape their grandmother's house in the city to return to their father and dog in their lighthouse home by the sea. Pursued by an owl witch, they discover a world of magic and uncover untold secrets of their past. Featuring the voices of Brendan Gleeson and Fionnula Flanagan, this charming picture offers a wonderful alternative to computer-animated fare, with music by composer Bruno Coulais (Coraline) and Irish band Kila that only adds to the enchantment. (At Kendall Square.)

Luc Dardenne's newest masterpiece focuses on Sandra Bya (Marion Cotillard in an Oscar-nominated performance), a woman who has a single weekend to convince a majority of her 16 co-workers to save her job—by forgoing their 1,000 euro bonuses. The Dardennes typically feature non-professional actors and follow their protagonists from behind, but here, working for the first time with an international star in a lead role, they capitalize on Cotillard's deeply expressive face, downplaying her natural beauty and finding a fractured psyche within her eyes. In placing their unflinching gaze squarely on the face of a seasoned pro, the Dardennes have captured one of their most naturalistic performances yet. They also capture a harsh truth: Most of Bya's co-workers aren't selfish, but simply struggling to get by, like so many are. And we witness this, time and again, as the Dardennes are steadfast in showing us each of Bya's encounters with them. Not nearly as depressing as it sounds, the film reveals some of the best and worst of humanity, but it's the kindness and generosity that you'll remember—and the changes of heart that don't come frequently enough. (At West Newton.)

GREENE LIGHT

Everyone knows two heads are better than one, but four? Seems to work for Milo Greene: Four members of the L.A.-based band take turns playing instruments, singing lead vocals and penning songs, while a fifth plays percussion. Together they work as one under their moniker, derived from the name of a fictional British manager the quartet invented to help book shows in their early days performing, producing folksy, melodic indie-pop that recalls both Of Monsters and Men and the xx— the latter most evident on 2015's shimmering sophomore effort, Control. Catch the ambidextrous quintet at the Sinclair on March 11. / Hannah Landers

This is certainly true in the world of fashion, and the reason we created a new digital LOOKBOOK. Now everyone can see what The Studio is all about... beautiful clothes. Just outside Boston, in the heart of Brookline's Coolidge Corner, The Studio has kept pace with the capricious world of fashion for 36 years and was described in Oprah's "O" Magazine as "a Comfort Zone."

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

NOW TRENDING Calling all BuzzFeed fiends, Upworthy enthusiasts and hashtag-happy live tweeters: Don't miss out on #VIRAL. Exploring the word's varied meanings—from memes to rogue code to infectious biological agents—the multimedia exhibit features Ranjit Bhatnagar's iambic pentameter Twitter algorithm, which spits out rhyming couplets on the spot, Sara Schnadt's yellow-roped matrix (pictured), which maps how data flow through social media, and Robert B. Lisek's personal DNA code, digitally melded with that of viruses like Ebola and polio. Catch the fever at the Boston Cyberarts Gallery, where the exhibit is on display through April 5. / Grace Rasmus

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeck-Boston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Mar-row Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

PASSPORT NOT REQUIRED...

Guests got a cruise down the Danube when New England Conservatory hosted A Feast of Music, its annual black-tie fundraiser for scholarships.

Held at the Fairmont Copley Plaza, the evening began with cocktails in the Oval Room, followed by a sumptuous dinner prepared by New York uber-chef Kurt Gutenbrunner and accompanied by stunning performances from NEC students. True to the evening's theme, the food (including something called "zwiebelrostbraten") and music (by the likes of Strauss, Dvorak and Liszt) all had a decidedly Eastern European flavor, and all surpassed expectation.

Prominent among the super swanky throng: board treasurer Tom Blumenthal and the tres chic Lisa, the enchanting Deborah Elfers, Boston's answer to Yoko Ono, Setsuko Hori (in a stunning silver kimono), Chestnut Hillions Cokie and Lee Perry, Beacon Hillions Deb Hanley and Frank McGuire and Suki and Miguel de Bragança, with their son, Miguel, squiring the drop-dead gorgeous Ty Sinnett, enchanting event co-chair Joan Yogg and her other half, Michael, iconoclastic blueblood Linda Cabot Black, the delightful Hope Lincoln Baker, Boston Ballet head honcha Max Hodges, the scrumptious Anne Fitzpatrick, statuesque brunette Barbara Jordan, the incomparable Joanne Dickinson, the stunning Sibila Glöggler and her charming other half, David Korb, French Cultural Center cutie Catheline van den Branden and the dashing Jeffrey Plunkett, and one woman who said, "I used to fly my stylist in from Argentina four times a year, until I found one I liked on Newbury Street."

After dinner and the performances, it was back to the Oval Room for the after-party, where committee members like brunette beauty Chynna Pope, newlyweds Christina and Peter Townsend, and the achingly lovely Suzanne Eliastam tripped the light fantastic until well into the wee hours.

All in all, a spectacular evening. The only false note? The child prodigy who played Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody neglected to cut the label off the sleeve of his suit, making the video of him playing look like an ad for Van Heusen.

LIGHTS, CAMERA, PARTY!

Boston got all glammed up to celebrate the Oscars at The Ellie Fund's annual Red Carpet Gala, the breast cancer nonprofit's Academy Awards blowout held at the Fairmont Copley Plaza. Yours truly got to play Fashion Police with Boston Herald style columnist Erica Corsano, greeting guests on the step-and-repeat and quizzing them on who they were wearing.

Among those who pulled out all the stops: Chika Offurum of WGBH (whose film The Last Days of Vietnam was up for best documentary), Ellie Fund founder Jeff Popkin, redheaded actress Melissa McMeekin, Wellesley yummy mummies Ashley Bernon, Penny Fireman and Sue Brady Hartigan, author and raconteur Casey Sherman, the sassy Anita Kagan, snacky chef Matthew Pidge, the evening's honorees, blond bombshell Heather Shanahan and TV exec Bill Fine of Channel 5, on-air talent J.C. Monahan, Phil Lipof, Kelley Tuthill and Jim Lokay, producers Christy Cashman and Mary Chiochios, lunachick Jeanie Flynn, the flawless April Soderstrom, fashionista Christina Pierce and her handsome husband, Ryan, lovable shutterbug Michael Blanchard, power chick Joni Lee Rossi, the super dapper Bentzion Chudnovskiy and others of an equally glittery ilk.

In between air-kissing, knocking back cocktails and grazing from the buffet, a few people actually paid attention to the ceremony being broadcast in the ballroom. Meanwhile, the award for snarkiest comment went to the person who said, "I love a plunging neckline, but that one goes all the way to her cervix." ◆

BREATHS OF FRESH AIR

AFTER A RECORD-SMASHING, SOUL-crushing winter, we've never needed less of an excuse to come out of hibernation. But we have so many good reasons to do so this season! The staff rounds up many of them in our "Spring Loaded" feature, covering highlights in dance, comedy, music, theater and visual art, from ballet set in an asylum to cartoons come to life on stage to art served up in shipping containers. In a second feature, Scott Kearnan hones in on performance art, exploring how the medium is moving front and center after decades on the fringe, in no small part thanks to institutional support from a new generation of curators. Meanwhile, Matt Martinelli dishes with the long-serving directors of the Museum of Fine Arts and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, while Jonathan Soroff catches up with Keith Lockhart, who's celebrating his 20th anniversary with the Boston Pops by putting on a knockout season (which includes chances to vote for song selections with your smartphone). Soroff also checks in with our cover subject, Hollywood heavyweight Timothy Hutton, star of John Ridley's American Crime, one of the standout debuts of the spring TV season—you know, just in case we do get a cold snap and you need something to binge-watch. Otherwise, happy dehibernating.

THE BEAT GOES ON

KEITH LOCKHART LOOKS BACK ON 20 YEARS WITH THE POPS.

EN AND NOW: Lockhart d... the Pops at his first ...sal (above) and today.

Keeping Time with the King of Pops

Two decades go by in the blink of an eye. It seems like last week that the city welcomed a boyish, floppy-haired moppet as the 20th conductor of the Boston Pops. This season, which begins on May 6, marks Keith Lockhart's 20th anniversary with the orchestra. "It's impossible to believe," he says. "I always knew it was a long-term commitment—but wow."

Before taking up the baton in Boston, Lockhart was the associate conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony and the Cincinnati Pops. When he arrived here, he had large shoes to fill. "The job had only been up for grabs once before since 1930, so the odds were slim I'd get it," he says. "But after a two-year courtship, all of a sudden, I'm sitting at

Now, 1,671 concerts later, he's shared the stage with a staggering list of luminaries. A mere sampling: Aerosmith, Ben Affleck, Buzz Aldrin, Jason Alexander, Big Bird, Mariah Carey, Harry Connick Jr., Elvis Costello, Sir Elton John, Toby Keith, Nathan Lane, Yo-Yo Ma, Shaquille O'Neal, Steve Martin, Jessye Norman, James Taylor, Sting, Bill Clinton, Ted Kennedy and Elizabeth Warren. He's also led 40 national and four international tours. "It's an awesome responsibility," he says. "It really is America's Orchestra. I hope to keep the Pops as a relevant entertainment option and honor that 130-year legacy of playing great music for people who don't know they like it until they hear it."

To that end, he's overseen numerous firsts during his tenure. In 1999, the orchestra garnered its first Grammy nomination. In 2005, it launched EdgeFest, which pairs the Pops with indie musical acts. Last year marked the first webcast of the July 4 fireworks and concert on the Esplanade, streamed live worldwide. This season debuts another innovation: By Popular Demand concerts (May 7, 16, 26, 29 & June 5), where audience members can vote in real time for what they want the orchestra to play. "So much of our world has become on demand or available online," Lockhart says. "I think one of the things the Pops has to offer is the concept of community, a shared experience, being part of a live audience,"

So how does it feel to be the Pops' second-longest serving maestro (after legend Arthur Fiedler, who served from 1930 to 1979)? "I still feel like I've got something to offer, but I can't imagine that it could ever be good for either me or the institution to have a 50-year relationship." Oh, well. Here's hoping for at least 20 more. / Jonathan Soroff

SOUNDS OF SPRING

KEITH'S TOP THREE PICKS FOR THE SEASON AHEAD

May 6, June 2-3, July 5

"Bernadette Peters is always incredible. I would work with her every day if I had the option. She and Audra McDonald, who's also joining us this season, are my two favorite female Broadway talents."

May 19-21

"I love the Mad Men redux concerts we're doing with the Midtown Men from Jersey Boys. Like 73 percent of the American population, I'm a huge fan of the show. It's kind of part of the continual updating of the Pops."

June 10-11

"The premiere of the concert version of Sondheim on Sondheim is something I'm very committed to.... We've created a multimedia experience with footage of Sondheim himself talking about the music."

MO FO' SHO': In addition to the signature dumplings, Tasty Mo:Mo: will serve a Thakali plate.

MORE MOMOS

AUTHENTIC NEPALESE DUMPLINGS ARRIVE IN MAGOUN SQUARE.

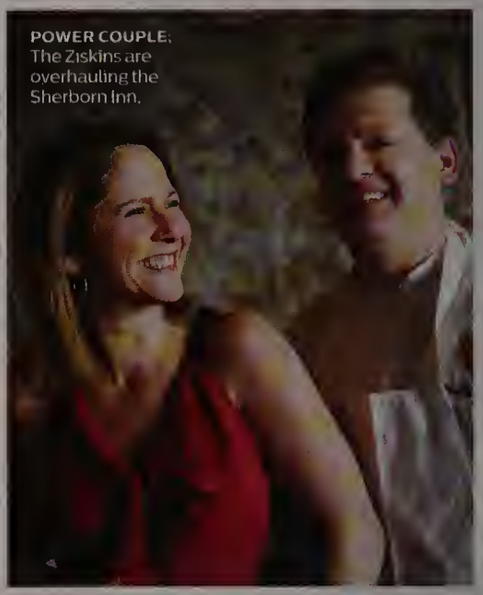
Tasty Mo:Mo:
503B Medford St., Somerville
(617-764-0222)

Sophie Thakali left her family and their restaurants behind in Nepal in 2006 when she immigrated to the U.S., intent on becoming a CPA. But after years of making dumplings—"momos" in Nepal—for her admiring friends, she decided to leave her accounting job and start her own dumpling shop. Two years later, Tasty Mo:Mo: is slated to open in late March in Somerville's Magoun Square. And Thakali is on the verge of making her new dream come true.

"I always knew I was going to do this, but I was not sure how or when I was going to start," Thakali says. "Every time I made them at my house, everyone said, 'Oh, can you sell these to me?' And I was like, 'Sure, why not.' And it became a habit."

The dumplings will come in chicken, pork, beef and veggie varieties to start; flavors such as spicy potato and spinach with feta may be added later. You can also order chili momos: any variety of dumpling topped with chili sauce and a sweet and spicy sauce. And all of the dumplings will be less than $7 for an order of eight.

"Every restaurant sells dumplings, but they don't have Nepalese authentic dumplings," Thakali says. "I have two different kinds of sauce—one chili and one tomato dipping sauce. The sauce is made from scratch with Szechuan peppers in it, so that makes it taste very different."



But Thakali knows she'll need more than momos to be successful. The menu will include a Thakali plate, featuring rice, lentils, mustard greens, tomato sauce, one kind of veggie and goat or chicken, as well as stir-fried noodle dishes popular in Nepal. But she'll stray from her native country's traditions in one respect: She'll offer beef, which is banned in Nepal because the cow is revered as sacred.

Customers can opt for takeout or delivery, or order at the counter and eat within the snug 500-square-foot space, which offers six stools and a table for four overlooking the open kitchen. There's also a Polaroid camera to encourage diners to post photos of themselves digging in to dumplings on the restaurant wall.

"I want it to feel welcoming and open to everyone," Thakali says. "I have a lot of competition, so I want to stand out and be the best."

PROUD HERITAGE

POWER COUPLE: The Ziskins are overhauling the Sherborn Inn.

After a major overhaul by its new owners—Josh and Jen Ziskin of Brookline's La Morra—the former Sherborn Inn will be ready for its close-up later this spring as the rechristened Heritage of Sherborn.

The plans are ambitious and still evolving, says Josh, La Morra's executive chef and co-owner. The historic property consists of a 62-seat tavern, a 130-seat banquet facility, three private dining rooms, a wine cellar, a handful of hotel rooms, an adjacent wine store and extensive grounds. The hotel rooms will have to wait their turn for a refurbishing as the culinary couple zeros in first on the food. Morphing into a gastropub, the tavern will serve fare such as burgers, shepherd's pie and steak frites. The Ziskins will carve the banquet space into a 40-seat fine dining restaurant encompassed by a lounge and bar. The wine room will undergo a "man-cave" makeover, and the wine store will offer a range of prepared foods, as well as morning coffee, pastries and breakfast sandwiches. If you're a fan of La Morra's Italian fare, however, take note: Heritage of Sherborn will feature American food. "[It'll] bring out my inner American cuisine," Josh says. "So I can get to use an avocado for the first time in 15 years!"

HELL'S ON EARTH...

Chef Brendan Pelley of Medfield's Zebra's Bistro & Wine Bar is enjoying his 15 minutes of fame as a contestant on the current season of Hell's Kitchen, facing the notoriously demanding Gordon Ramsay. At the end of the first episode, his signature dish of tempura soft-shell crab with quick pickles and yuzu aioli triumphed, and it will be available on the Zebra's menu "as soon as soft-shell crabs come back into season," he promises. Pelley's prize for winning the first challenge was a meeting with William Shatner, which the chef describes as "totally surreal, being a Trekkie."

THREE TO TANGO

After all we've endured this winter, it's only natural to start thinking about grilling outdoors a little bit early. And in my mind there's no better wine to pair with barbecued or grilled meats than Argentine malbec, which is juicy, rich, full of flavor and yet softer in tannins than cabernet. It's true that we have to be a bit warier of this popular wine category than we were in the not-too-distant past, when they all tasted good regardless of price and you could choose almost indiscriminately. It's also true that we usually have to spend more now to get a delicious bottle, but these picks from the Land of the Tango are all outstanding in their price ranges. / Sondy Block

ANGULO INNOCENTI MALBEC, LA CONSULTA, MENDOZA, 2012 This is an absolute steal. Made from grapes in high-altitude Uco Valley vineyards, which experience wide swings between day and night temperatures, the wine is florally perfumed, with enticing violet, tobacco and black cherry aromas. Soft, ripe and round, with sensual notes of plum, coffee bean and mocha, this has an understated creamy richness that would play beautifully with ribs. $20, Vino di Vino, Newton

ACHAVAL FERRER MALBEC, MENDOZA, 2012 Achaval Ferrer remains one of the superstars of South American wine; his style is earthier and more terroir-driven, medium rather than full in body, with a substantial acid structure. The nose of this wine is expressively raspberry-like, with floral, cola and herb-laced scents. Quite intense and concentrated on the palate, it offers understated but evocative plum-accented flavors. Pair it with a charred sirloin or hanger steak. $30, Combridge Wine & Spirits

RENACER PUNTO FINAL RESERVA MALBEC, 2012 An engaging blend of Uco Valley and Lujan de Cuyo fruit, this wine spends almost a year in barrels. It has a cocoa-like, dark berry, molten chocolate character that is hard to resist. Soft in texture, with almond-like flavor accents and a red-fruit-driven finish, this would be my choice to accompany a sizzling barbecued chicken. $20, Combridge Wine & Spirits

Piper Kerman's memoir Oronge Is the New Block: My Yeor in o Women's Prison made the Brookline native a best-selling author—and the inspiration for the hit Netflix show, premiering its third season in June. Now a champion for prison reform, she receives the Humanist Heroine Award from the Harvard Humanist Community on March 31. / Meghon Kovanaugh

WHAT'S THE HUMANIST IMPACT OF YOUR BOOK? Well, I think that we tend not to think about the 2.4 million people who fill up our prisons and jails as people. We tend to think of other words, like felons and criminals and convicts and lots of other really harsh words, but we do tend to forget about the humanity of each and every one of those people.

WHEN DID YOU REALIZE YOU WANTED TO WRITE ABOUT YOUR EXPERIENCE? It was after I came home. People were just so fascinated by hearing every single detail about prison life if I was willing to describe it.

YOU'RE STILL IN TOUCH WITH WOMEN YOU MET IN PRISON. DID THEY RESPOND POSITIVELY TO THE BOOK? Yes, the response has been very positive. I'm really grateful, really enthusiastic. The response to the show is generally enthusiastic too. Obviously, it's a much bigger departure for the women who have actually lived through the events depicted in the book. I think that for some women the humor in the show is hard for them to reconcile with their own experiences because of course prison is really traumatic—it's intended to be.

HOW DO YOU FEEL WHEN THE TV PLOTLINES DIFFER FROM YOUR EXPERIENCES? What's definitely most important to me is simply that the audience is engaged with all these different female protagonists as protagonists, and sort of the recognition that every single person in prison or jail sort of is the hero of their own story even though they may be making really big mistakes, as sort of every protagonist or hero does. Because I think that's a really new way of looking at people who we typically paint as villains.

A FAREWELL TOUR

With nearly 50 years of helming two world-renowned Boston museums between them, Museum of Fine Arts director Malcolm Rogers and Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum director Anne Hawley have both announced their plans to retire. Before they leave, we asked them to look back on their tenures. / Matt Martinelli

Hockney's Gorrowby Hill

MALCOLM ROGERS

FAVORITE...

...ACQUISITION: Garrowby Hill, from David Hockney's dramatic panoramic landscapes series, is a favorite—and not just because I grew up only about 15 miles away! It debuted in the U.S. in the 1998 MFA exhibition New Paintings by David Hockney. It is a powerful example of the artist's distinctive landscape style with its patchwork palette of bright purples, yellows, reds and its deep perspectives.

...WORK IN THE COLLECTION: Right now my favorite in the collection is the tapestry revealing Tomyris, queen of the Massagetae, in her garden receiving a messenger from Cyrus, king of the Persian Empire. It's a luscious tapestry filled with movement, perspective and color.

TENURE HIGHLIGHT

The transformative Art of the Americas Wing, and the many times we've been able to open new doors to the Boston community and global audiences. From reopening the doors at Huntington Avenue, to the naming of the Avenue of the Arts, to improving digital access to the collection—including e-publications, distance learning and more.

Working with a great collection and talented staff generating programs, as well as working on the design of the new wing with architect Renzo Piano, board chair Barbara Hostetter and trustee Bill Egan.

MOST OVERLOOKED PIECE IN THE MUSEUM

Tiepolo's ceiling piece, Virtue and Nobility Crowning Love, in our European galleries. It was painted for a palace in Venice and somehow brings the magical light we associate with that city to our museum.

Michelangelo's Pietà for Vittorio Colonna, which is hidden away in the cabinet in the Short Gallery. It's so deeply emotional.

FUTURE PLANS

I hope to be on both sides of the Atlantic—after all, I have 20 years of friends here. I'd like to return to my scholarly pursuits, listen to more music and read new books.

Seeing more of my husband, who lives in New York during the week—and living in art.

Tiepolo's Virtue and Nobility Crowning Love

Michelangelo's Pietà for Vittorio Colonna

STACKED UP: Panelli's eggplant parm sandwich is as neat as it is delicious.

Good Eats: Purple Haze

Whereas a typical serving of eggplant parm is a greasy, gooey mess, the version that David Iknaian works into a sandwich at his Brookline shop, Panelli's Pizza + Parm, is as tidy as it is tasty. Between the halves of toasted Iggy's ciabatta, he layers mellow, milky-rich Fiore di Nonno mozzarella and adds just enough red sauce to moisten the bread without saturating it. The final touch is thin-sliced eggplant slabs that are breaded in herb- and cheese-seasoned crumbs, fried to order and piled so neatly that the cross-section looks like a savory stack cake. / Elizabeth Bomze

RULES OF ATTRACTION

A LOCAL PROFESSOR OF WOMEN'S SEXUALITY EXPLORES WHAT DRIVES FEMALE DESIRE

COME AS YOU ARE* by Emily Nagoski
Published by Simon & Schuster, 416 pages, $16

SEX SHOULD BE PLAYFUL, AND EMILY Nagoski —a professor who teaches women's sexuality at Smith College—writes about it partly in that spirit. But she, science and many women know from experience that it can be otherwise. The Big O can be a "no-gasm," anxiety can intervene, and being in the same bed with a partner may not mean being on the same page, emotionally or sexually.

It turns out it's less the body than the brain that brings the buzz of desire and connection. Nagoski outlines three key mechanisms underlying pleasure, which she calls "enjoying," "expecting" and "eagerness." She notes how women's internal experience of "brakes" and "accelerators" strongly influence the direction of pleasure; so, we need to learn to "turn off the offs"—stress, fatigue, self-critical thoughts, worry that the kids could walk in—and "turn on the ons," like a favorite fantasy, for instance. And she stresses the importance of learning to manage our monitor, that often-impatient internal observer of our thoughts and feelings, which can help or hinder desire.

Nagoski also recommends taking a visual voyage to the vulva, and she continually affirms the normalcy of everyone's anatomy. She's reassuring about the subtlety of sexual response as well; orgasm itself isn't standardized, but experienced in a wide range of styles. Throughout the text, worksheets and charmingly casual conversations with women bring forth hopefulness and, yes, sexiness.

FROM PAGE 226: We'll start with where desire comes from: Desire is arousal in context. And then we'll talk about what desire is not—it's not a drive, not a "hunger"—and why that matters so much. Which will bring us to the surprising truth about what desire is: It's curiosity. ◆

FIRST CLASS

A GREAT MICHAEL SCHLOW EATERY IS JUST ONE OF HANOVER, NEW HAMPSHIRE'S SURPRISES.

EVERY COLLEGE TOWN REFLECTS, TO SOME degree, a glimmer of Evelyn Waugh's Oxford. His city of aquatint, exhaling "the soft vapours of a thousand years of learning," is the archetype, and while its imitators lack the ancient stones, they share a common climate. More clubby than cloistral, American college towns are generally safe, somewhat overpriced and, above all, young.

One of the original college towns in America is Hanover, New Hampshire, home to Dartmouth College and its orbiting grad schools. A two-hour drive from Boston (surprisingly frequent buses make the haul from South Station), Hanover roosts on the Connecticut River opposite the Vermont border. For a town that's less populated than Swampscott, it's thickly cultured, as would be expected with a major research university as its center of gravity. You know you're in the pull of the Ivy League when a rural highway exit is jammed with Range Rovers.

The best place to ground your explorations is the Hanover Inn Dartmouth. Owned by the college, it sits at the forefront of the Green, a grassy square that anchors the campus' sprawl of Georgian architecture. The inn dates from an 18th-century tavern owned by one Gen. Ebenezer Brewster, but the current building enjoyed a facelift a couple of years ago. Despite its extensive conference facilities, it has a boutique air: The lobby boasts a profusion of grandfather clocks and a granite table loaded with orchids. Rooms are Yankee simple, although Simon Pearce glass and Pompanoosuc Mills furniture gives them a locally sourced elegance.

Local sourcing is also a theme in the inn's restaurant, Pine, which is steeped in modern rusticity, from the wooden boards on the menus to the ceiling beams repurposed from a barn. Launched by Boston celebrity chef Michael Schlow, it could be a destination restaurant solely on account of its pastas—light, almost creamy gnocchi and an earthy, exquisite tortellini dish with wild mushrooms and chestnuts. But that would be selling it short. Chef Justin Dain oversees a kitchen that impresses at every mark, from crunchy fries with malt vinegar aioli at the bar to a pan-roasted venison tenderloin that would be a virtuoso cap to a graduation dinner. There are simple pleasures like mushroom polenta gilded with the yolk of a poached egg, surprising ones like a bright hamachi crudo with lotus root, and ones that are entirely expected of a Schlow menu—the "Hanover Burger" is an upstanding iteration of the lamented burger from Radius, down to the crispy onions. Also note: If you've never tasted short rib hash with horseradish cream, you must not miss breakfast.

Depending on the vantage of your table, you may see Baker-Berry Library on the opposite side of the Green. Make the effort to walk across, since there's a National Historic Landmark in the basement. The Epic of American Civilization is a cycle of murals by Mexican artist José Clemente Orozco, and it lives up to the grandiosity of its name. Painted between 1932 and 1934, it has all the subtlety you'd expect of a 3,200-square-foot fresco showing everything from the arrival of the Aztecs in Mexico to the horrors of industrialization. Panel 15's depiction of Anglo-Americans as soulless pod people is a particularly funny jab, considering the profile of the typical Dartmouth student in the 1930s.

Around the corner from the inn, the Hood Museum of Art has one of the largest university art collections in the country, with a particular emphasis on ethnographic objects like Melanesian masks and ceremonial axes from the Congo. There's a smattering of European art, too, but the highlight of the collection is a set of six enormous stone reliefs from an Assyrian palace, dating from 900 B.C. A few weeks ago, these reliefs accrued a grim footnote—ISIS just bulldozed the site from which they originated.

Whet your commercial appetite at the gift shop before strolling up the block to South Main Street, which yields a good number of boutiques, gelato shops and cafes. You can grab inexpensive margaritas at Molly's, a noisy, pizza-oriented spot, or try a pint of local Switchback Pale Ale at Murphy's, a snug gastropub. Naturally, the wall above the bar is decked with tributes to graduating classes from the Tuck Business School. Hanover is, to its core, a college town. ◆

KHMER, YOU

A STALWART STILL BEGUILES WITH CAMBODIAN FOR BEGINNERS.

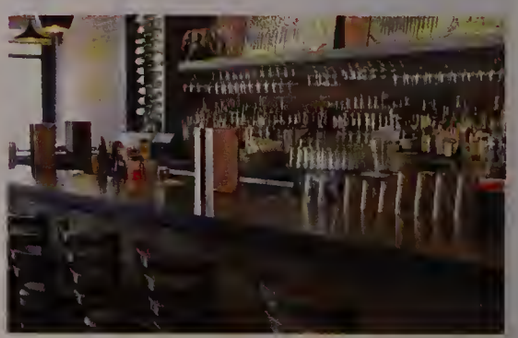
The Elephant Walk
1415 Washingtan St., Boston
(617-247-1500)
elephantwalk.com

With so many new restaurants to explore, The Improper doesn't often rereview old standbys. We made an exception for the Elephant Walk South End, the fifth incarnation of a Cambodian/French concept that debuted in Somerville nearly 25 years ago and still has a surviving sibling near Porter Square. In the early '90s, a menu with Khmer cuisine on one side, French on the other and some fusion in between, served with fine-dining flair, felt revolutionary. More than two decades on and newly moved into the thick of the revitalized South End dining scene, how well does that blueprint hold up?

The Elephant Walk always traced its dual nature to its chefs' Cambodian roots, where by ancestry and tradition they straddled two cuisines. Not coincidentally, familiar French dishes provided a safety net for Americans who in those less-adventurous times found Khmer food mysterious, even frightening. Today, that European accent is still welcome in the form of excellent bread with oil and shallots, an extensive wine list and good desserts. But the menu hasn't stood still. Gluten-free dishes are now highlighted. Half-portions of Cambodian dishes enable diners to order in more traditional Khmer family style. Perhaps reflecting Thai cuisine's popularity, condiments of chili/garlic sauce and habanero sauce are now offered (though Cambodian cooks favor black pepper for heat).

What hasn't changed is the lovely comforts of Khmer dishes like rouleaux ($5/$10), crisp pork spring rolls to wrap in lettuce leaves with sprouts, basil and mint, then dip in tuk trey (Cambodia's favorite hot/sour/salty/sweet table sauce). Nataing ($6/$9) is still a sweet, mild coconut-milk curry of ground pork for spooning over crisp rice cakes. B'baw mouan ($6/$9) remains a soothing congee with chicken breast and the welcome smack of fried garlic. Soupe Phnom-Penh ($6/$9) still reads like Southeast Asian ramen with a leaner broth, pork belly slices and fierce fried garlic. Salade cambodgienne ($6/$10) is ever the fabulous, vibrant slaw of cabbage, carrots, chicken breast, red pepper and onion dressed with crushed peanuts, fresh herbs and tuk trey.

Timid patrons may still resort to French dishes, but those aren't the kitchen's long suit. Croustillants de polenta ($12/$18) is a workmanlike rendition of crisped, Parmesan-laced polenta with grill-charred slices of zucchini and chickpea/tomato ragout. But coq au vin blanc ($15/$24), bone-in chicken braised in white wine with bacon, mushrooms and onions, suffers from badly overcooked noodles. Bavette à l'échalotte ($25), a grilled flat-iron steak with Bordelaise sauce and frites, is perfectly adequate.



Meanwhile, mee siem ($11/$17), rice noodles with tofu, pork and crisp vegetables garnished with sliced omelet, sings in a salty/sweet/garlicky sauce. Loc lac ($14/$22) nails the classic Khmer caramel sauce with garlic, soy and copious black pepper, but the lean beef tenderloin cubes end up slightly dry, needing their lime/garlic dip. Keing m'noa ($13/$21) makes a better choice of cut with pork shoulder for its terrific coconut-milk curry with pineapple and lime leaves: It's coarse-grained yet tender, slightly fatty and delicious.

Fine French desserts remain real assets, as in le pèché au chocolat ($8.50), a super-rich flourless chocolate truffle cake with a squiggle of nicely acidic raspberry coulis. Mousse aux fruits de la passion ($8) is lighter, with citrusy passion fruit mousse served in an almond lace cup flanked with rum-soaked pineapple chunks.

The already-humming bar features craft-leaning cocktails like On the Boulevard ($12)—think a rye-based Negroni—and the Negroni bianco ($12), the Negroni's albino cousin. (Ironically, their traditional Negroni needs work.) The wine list is consistently rewarding, with more than 20 options by the glass ($8-$13) and more than 60 by the bottle ($36-$90, most under $50). Nicely priced whites like the 2012 Weingut Spater-Veit Piesporter Grafenberg Riesling Kabinett ($10/$39), a crackly, off-dry Mosel, work beautifully with the Khmer dishes, while affordable reds like the 2010 Château de la Selve "Palissaire" ($8/$32), a soft, quaffable Rhône merlot blend, ably suit the French fare. Easier still with both cuisines are the beers, including a dozen drafts ($6-$8), mostly American micros, and five bottles ($4-$5.50), including China's Tsingtao and Thailand's Singha, both exceptional with Khmer dishes.

The handsome room, offering familiar bistro accents of exposed infrastructure and brick, is lively without being too loud for conversation; service is reasonably polished and eminently patient with newbies. If there's fault to find with this venerable formula, it's that modern diners are more open than ever to funky, fermented flavors, from smelly cheeses to cultured dairy drinks, from kombucha to kimchi. At humbler Khmer joints in Revere and Lowell, chefs make liberal use of fish sauce, shrimp paste and especially prahok, the assertive fermented fish paste that is the cuisine's most distinctive hallmark. At the Elephant Walk, those redolent accents are muted to near-invisibility. Maybe if it starts offering those more challenging flavors as an option, the Elephant Walk can once again feel like a cool, daring choice for diners. But in 2015, its bowdlerized take on Cambodian food, while admittedly still delectable, feels a bit tame. ◆

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

→ The Friends of Dana-Farber Cancer Institute held its 17th annual Chefs Cooking for Hope event on March 5. More than 40 chefs and nine beverage companies set up stations throughout the lobby at 125 High Street to offer food and drink samples to 350 guests. The event raised more than $50,000.

→ Party-goers from across the country attended the seventh annual Boston Winter Ball on Feb. 28 at the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel. This year, the gala raised funds for the Corey C. Griffin Charitable Foundation, a nonprofit established in memory of an original Winter Ball committee member and Boston College classmate of the event's founders. Two hundred and fifty sponsors attended a VIP dinner, with another 600 guests convening in the hotel's ballroom for dancing. The evening raised $600,000.

ASK CHERYL

Q: MY THIGHS ARE MY PROBLEM AREA; I HAVE SADDLEBAGS THAT BOTHER ME, ESPECIALLY WHEN I WEAR JEANS.

A: Liposuction is always an option, but there are two non-surgical choices to reduce saddlebags and fat in the outer thighs. One technique freezes the fat away and one technique melts the fat away. They are both safe and effective and there is no downtime or recovery period.

CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to freeze and destroy fat cells. RF body contouring uses radio frequency energy to heat up and melt away fat cells. After either treatment, the destroyed fat cells are gradually removed by the immune system, resulting in a noticeable reduction in the outer thigh area.

The first step is a complimentary consultation to see which approach would work best for your particular needs. Our clients have been thrilled with their results and their slimmer thighs!

GROWING PAINS

THE DYSTOPIAN INSURGENT SUFFERS FROM MIDDLE CHILD SYNDROME.

"PEACE. LONG AGO, BEFORE THE FOUNDERS established this world, that word was all but meaningless."

So begins Kate Winslet's narration in the second installment of the films based on Veronica Roth's Divergent series, the 26-year-old's trilogy of young adult novels. Oscar winner Winslet returns as Jeanine, whose speech continues via holograms projected throughout the ruins of what had been Chicago—before the world as we know it collapsed 200 years prior, splitting into five factions: Abnegation, Amity, Candor, Dauntless and Erudite. It's the first of a few massive exposition dumps that viewers must endure.

Ostensibly, Jeanine is addressing her faction, the Erudite, but the tale she's telling should be well-known to her intellectual followers. Then again, they also can't tell that their leader is effectively Hitler incarnate. And why should they? After all, director Robert Schwentke worked from a script that was polished by Akiva Goldsman, a writer who'd be best known for his hilariously awful screenplay for Batman and Robin, if he hadn't lucked into an Oscar for his adaptation of Sylvia Nasar's A Beautiful Mind.

We pick back up with heroine Beatrice "Tris" Prior (23-year-old Shailene Woodley, or J-Law Jr.), who chops her long locks into a short bob that's mocked by Peter (Miles Teller) but embraced by Four (30-year-old Brit Theo James), her lover. Retroactively, we find out that Tris' mother (Ashley Judd, seen in flashbacks and a number of virtual reality "simulations") was killed by Jeanine's militarized forces in the previous movie, not only for protecting her daughter, but also because she was trying to keep a totemic LED-bedazzled box (aka, this film's MacGuffin) from falling into Jeanine's evil hands—which it does, anyway.

Since last we saw them escaping Jeanine's clutches, Tris, her brother Caleb (Ansel Elgort), Four and Peter have been hiding out with the earthy farming faction Amishy, err...Amity. While everyone in this hippie-dippy community greets them with Stepford-like smiles, Tris suffers through PTSD-driven nightmares, when not brooding about killing Jeanine or attacking Peter with a knife for teasing her about the death of her parents. You know, everyday kid stuff.

It's but one example of how this movie keeps rewriting the rules—and Roth's book.

But, given how this material is pitched squarely at the high school set, it makes sense when Amity's principal-like peacenik leader, Johanna (Oscar winner Octavia Spencer), reacts to such behavior by telling Tris: "My office. Now."

Alas, once Johanna gives Tris a Very Stern Talking To, Amity is surrounded by Jeanine's trigger-happy troops, led by Four's hot-headed former friend, Eric (Jai Courtney). Still, since nearly everyone in the future is a terrible shot, Tris and her friends manage to escape into a wide-open field, even though they're pursued by about a dozen soldiers with automatic weapons. Dashing for a speeding train, Four leaps in front of it, like Superman. And why not? Even though the Divergent series has been packaged as another progressive girl-power showcase (like Stephenie Meyer's Twilight Saga and Suzanne Collins' The Hunger Games before it), this film backpedals on muscular feminism as it shifts the action focus onto Four, who saves Tris more than once.

When they hop aboard the train (future society's travel mode of choice), Four saves Tris and the timid Caleb from getting pushed off by Edgar (Jonny Weston) and his young band of too-cool-for-school Factionless, who live—and travel—like hobos. It's but one example of how this movie keeps rewriting the rules—and Roth's book. Not only does Edgar not appear in the novel, but neither does that MacGuffin. Caleb helpfully tells Tris (and confused readers of the novel) that it contains a Very Important Message from the Founders—which can only be accessed via Tris and her superb virtual reality video game skills. Or something.

Tris spends most of the third act playing through five "simulations," after giving herself up to Jeanine to prevent all of the movie's nameless extras from committing suicide due to some mind-control bullets they've been shot with. And although it seems nonsensical for Jeanine's forces to non-fatally shoot everyone, just so they can go through the extra step of killing themselves later, I'm not an Oscar-winning screenwriter like Goldsman, so what the hell do I know?

When Four risks his life in an attempt to free Tris, she'd rather hook herself back up to Jeanine's fancy Xbox one last time, treating viewers to another overblown spectacle of swirling special effects, which were designed to take full advantage of this sequel's ticket price-inflating use of 3-D.

"Look, I know it doesn't make sense," she tells him, "but you're going to have to trust me." Which sums up this middle chapter in a nutshell. You may not know what you've just watched, but you'll have to go on faith that it'll add up to something once The Divergent Series: Allegiant – Part 1 and Part 2 conclude the story in 2016 and '17.

Hmm, maybe those magic suicide bullets are beginning to make sense, after all. ◆

HUMAN RESOURCES

A VIRGINIA PRODUCER FINDS SURPRISE SOLO FAME THROUGH HIS STUDIO VISION.

MATTHEW E. WHITE RELISHES crafting his warm, intimate tunes with a sprawling cast. "I believe in the power of humanity coming through the microphone," the hushed soul crooner proclaims. "When there are 50 people in a room playing in a string section, it is better than one person playing [that part] 50 times."

White's content with even a fraction of those players as founder/producer of Spacebomb Records in Richmond, Virginia. His tight-knit team of collaborators help write, arrange, engineer and curate a signature in-house sound, much like Stax and Motown did in their day.

"Those communities and record labels work because they invest in something over the long term," says White, 32. He acknowledges the luxury of having the studio and musical contacts to shape records within reasonable costs, even when adding strings, horns and choirs. "Spacebomb is founded on people," he says, "and trusting people and investing time and energy in those relationships."

White made his 2012 debut Big Inner as a virtual advertisement for Spacebomb, only to find himself as a touted solo artist, splitting time between the studio and the road. That profile's grown with the March 10 release of White's follow-up, Fresh Blood, plus other Spacebomb projects, led by singer Natalie Prass' self-titled January debut.

"The expectations or pressure or anything of that nature is so small in comparison to how wonderful it is to have the opportunity just to have the resources to make music for a living," says White, who plays Great Scott on April 5.

"I believe in the power of humanity coming through the microphone."

The son of Christian missionaries, he first learned the basics of a recording studio at Master Sound in Virginia Beach through owner Rob Ulsh, who attended church with White's family. "He said, 'Yeah, you could paint my studio,' " White recalls of his introduction to the room where Missy Elliott, Justin Timberlake and Pharrell Williams recorded. "The first time anyone talked to me about what a producer did was Rob Ulsh. He said, 'A producer has to know a lot more than everyone else, and he has to have a vision for how things are going to go.' "

However, the budding guitarist found his musical footing—and future Spacebomb accomplices—at Virginia Commonwealth University. "There's no way I had any business being let into a jazz program," White says. "But that was fortunate for me as I was able to learn the nuts and bolts about how music works."

Guitarist Trey Pollard (who co-produced Fresh Blood), bassist Cameron Ralston and drummer Pinson Chanselle became core co-conspirators. "We definitely have similar aesthetic values, and different skill sets in some ways, but the same goals," White says. "We communicate in the same language. That's really important technically—like I can put notes on a piece of paper, and they can read it. But we also have the same listening vocabulary to a large extent."

That's largely American music, with blurred lines between blues, jazz, R&B, soul and hip-hop. "The only way to train yourself is to make sure your favorite records are the best records," White says, citing Marvin Gaye's What's Going On, Stevie Wonder's Innervisions and Bob Dylan's The Times They Are A-Changin'. "When your music comes out of the speakers, you have a bar to measure against."

Like those artists, White tackles "songs that have a weight to them" on Fresh Blood. It's centered by contemplative songs about his acting idol Philip Seymour Hoffman, the suicide of a friend's mother and close-to-home sexual abuse in the church ("I saw the trauma and pain and tremendous terror that breaking of trust causes within people and a community," he says). Yet White also embraces love songs and the groovy "Rock & Roll Is Cold," goosed by "ooh-la-la" backup vocals.

Now, after playing a New York record-release show with a 30-piece band, White's touring with a quartet anchored by Ralston and Chanselle. "The live show is about the songs," he says, recalling the Beatles' stark 1969 rooftop concert in the wake of highly produced albums. "It's just getting to that with a different set of tools." ◆

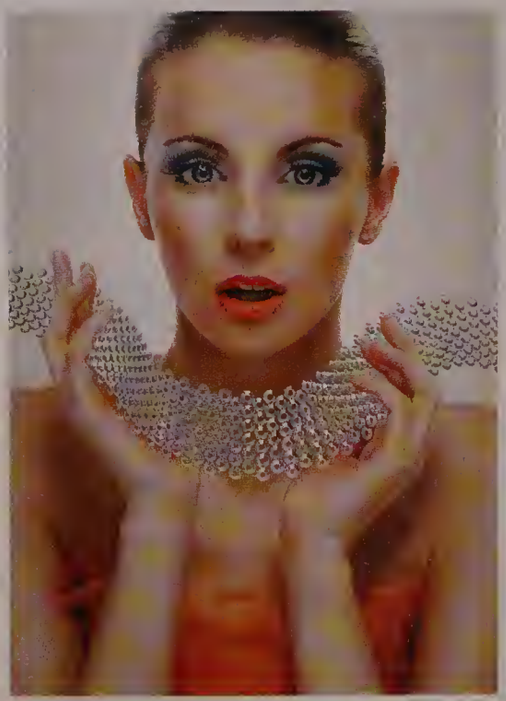
SINK OR SWIM

OR, A THIRD CHOICE: STAY ON LAND.

I ENVY YOU, SWIMMERS. YOU ARC CONFIDENTLY into the pool and slide beneath the water for half a furlong before surfacing to take the merest sniff of oxygen, the water barely rippling as you majestically glide past, like Aquaman or a humanoid barracuda. Whereas when I'm swimming, it looks like one of those YouTube videos where a crocodile drags a water buffalo into a river. I'm not the crocodile.



The fact that I never learned to swim stems from an odd paradox: My mother was always afraid I'd drown. And you can't drown if you're not in the water, which is, unfortunately, where most swimming lessons take place. I think she actually brought us to one or two lessons, where degrees of aptitude were designated by various types of aquatic animals—guppy, swordfish, shark. I believe my final classification was lobster, a repulsive exoskeleton-clad insect that scuttles along the sea floor on its disgusting arthropod legs. As far as swimming goes, I'm on par with a creature that can fly to Miami in a carry-on box from Legal's.

During grade school, the summer YMCA day care program made weekly trips to a lake, where I'd go in the shallow water and walk along on my hands, kicking my legs behind me to pretend I was dog-paddling. At some point I learned how to tread water and flail my way forward, but I don't think swimming is supposed to put you into cardiac arrest 10 feet away from the beach. I might be doing it wrong. It didn't help, I suppose, that in Maine the water was so numbingly cold that after 30 seconds you couldn't tell whether you were doing a technically flawless crawl or a waterborne version of "The Humpty Dance."

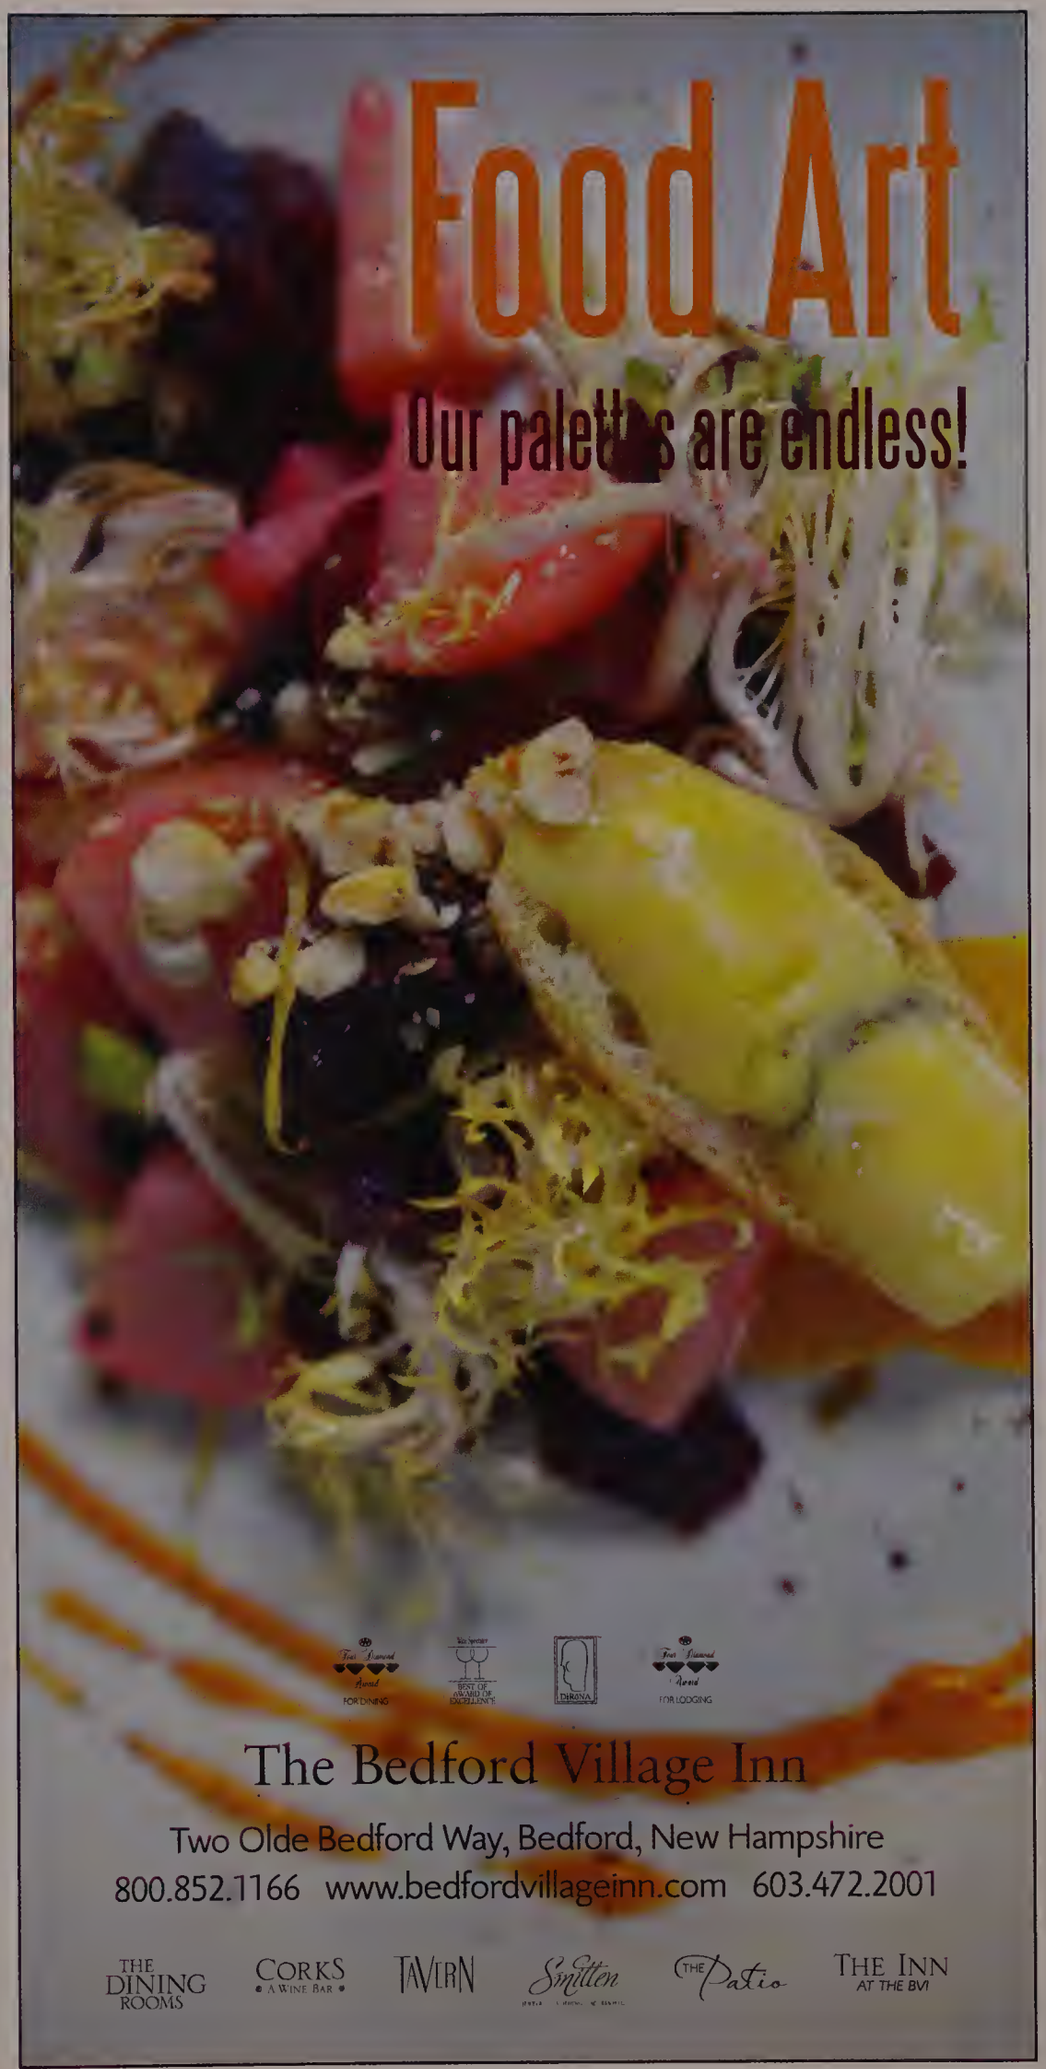
So, like many a parent over the ages, I've resolved that my kids should not follow in my lobster tracks, that they should learn the ways of the dolphin and the Spitz, though maybe not the Phelps, given what he's been up to lately. If nothing else, I'll have someone to rescue me when I fall in. Because my wife, Heather, certainly won't be doing it. Her swimming style is best described as "cat who fell into the bathtub."



As much as you want to believe that your kids are infinitely malleable, bursting with unlocked potential, sometimes it turns out that they're really just like you and limited in the same ways. I've been taking them to swimming lessons, which I now refer to as Tantrum Tuesdays. I figured that at ages 3 and 5, their plastic little brains would make neural connections that would have them deftly butterflying across the pool by summertime. Lately I've downgraded my expectations to "Get in the pool without screaming and crying and making Daddy look like a sadistic Tiger Mom in front of the water-aerobics ladies."

Their most recent lesson began unraveling in the parking lot outside of the pool place. "I don't wanna go to swim lessons," said the younger one as soon as we parked. "I wanna stay in the Bronco." I explained that I couldn't leave a 3-year-old alone in a car, which made him flip out even harder and start going into a full meltdown as we walked toward the building. Fun fact: When this kid gets on a real frothy crying jag, he pukes. I began contemplating how that would go over if he did it in the pool. OK, calling an audible! No swim lessons today.

The older one seemed somewhat pleased that he'd be the brave one who suited up for his lesson. Until, that is, he got in the pool with our friend Katie, the swim instructor. Then he began crying and kept on bawling for the whole half-hour lesson. At one point I texted Heather, "The pool is now 90 percent tears." The younger one sat next to me on a bench, playing with a toy boat—a completely dry toy boat. "You wanna take that in the pool?" I asked him. "No," he replied. "Pool's too scary." Yeah, kid, tell me about it. If you yell "Marco," I'll yell "Polo" from three rows back in the lounge chairs. Pools are creepy. You ever see Cocoon? And oceans and lakes are even worse. Things live in those. You know octopuses have beaks? Hey, enjoy the water! Don't get eaten by the bird-faced tentacle monster! When I was a lobsterman, I was doing a public service, as far as I'm concerned. I was removing bitey claw animals from the water. Every little bit helps.

At the end of the lesson, Katie said, "Maybe you should sign them up for group lessons. Those start next week. It might be good for them to see other kids in the pool." Well, maybe. Or maybe we're just destined to be a non-swimming kind of family, four cats in a bathtub. ◆

The medical system is driving me nuts. I have a great plan at work that allows me to see a variety of doctors. But when I try to make an appointment, and it's not urgent, I am often shut out or given appointments months down the road. Any suggestions about how I can get closer to the front of the line? This is a tough one. Years ago, there were medical specialties that made it impossible to get an appointment—usually podiatry and dermatology. I would call a dermatologist's office, say, on March 1. Then I'd be told, "The doctor can see you May 4." To me, this is inexcusable. So, for a long time, whenever the screener said, "What's the nature of your symptom?" I would say, "I don't really have a symptom. I'm calling about the doctor's emotional future." There would always be a pause at the other end of the line, and I could see the thought balloon over the person's head that probably said, "Gee... maybe it's the doctor's psychiatrist. I'd better pass along the message." Invariably I'd get a call back from the curious doctor, who'd laugh and say, "We have an opening tomorrow at 2." It's amazing how many times this has worked. I simply made a doctor curious and separated myself from the usual patients seeking an appointment.

Another technique I've successfully used over the years is to seek information about the doctor's hobbies or interests. Now with Google, it's so easy to find information. Then I leave a message with the gatekeeper and say, "Please tell the doctor that I have a special take on bird watching that the doctor should know." When the doctor would call, curious about what I knew, he'd say, "I'm intrigued. What do you know about birds?" I'd say, "I knew if I mentioned your interest in ornithology, I'd get an appointment that wasn't six months away." Desperate times call for desperate measures.

I was recently helping a friend move to a new apartment, and the leg of the chair I was helping to move in cracked a window. Should I offer to pay to get it fixed? Or should my friend just appreciate that I worked my butt off to help and cover the repair himself? Well, I suppose no good deed goes unpunished. If I had volunteered to help a friend move, I would offer to pay for the broken window. But I would also expect my friend to say, "No, of course not. Don't even think about it." If it was my apartment, the moving process is always such a pain in the butt that I would fully expect something to add to the pain, like a chair breaking, or something getting stolen without my noticing until a month later. But I would assume responsibility and pay for the window, grateful for a friend's help.

You could also check to see if your friend has homeowners' insurance to cover it. If your friend does, I would definitely offer to pay.

My friend recently lost his brother and then his dog. He lost his job a year ago and has health issues. The poor guy is going through tough times, but more and more he is relying on me as an ear and a shoulder to cry on. I certainly sympathize, but it's no fun to be around him. I find my days off are spent being a psychologist for him. How can I extricate myself from this situation without hurting him any more than he is hurting already? I often shake my fist selfishly when people needing the therapy your friend requires suck all the oxygen out of the room. But then I think how much better it is to have the strong shoulders than to be the needy one. His job status and health are his major issues, and the former might be the most important thing. Health often suffers when you're depressed and wondering "What's my future?" and "Can I put food on the table?"

But you should also know that there are some people you cannot save from themselves.

It might help both of you to concentrate on his resume and his network of other friends and contacts who might lead to work. But you should also know there are some people you cannot save from themselves. If your friend's problems become endless, you may lose a friend and regain a certain sanity.

I'm being driven nuts by little things, like when I leave a restaurant at about 10 pm and everyone says, "Have a great night." I'm prone to say, "It's over. I'm headed home." People say things without thinking or even meaning it. Just knee-jerk comments: "Are you still enjoying that?" when I am in mid-bite of something I really don't enjoy. Why doesn't restaurant management realize that these comments don't enhance the dining experience? What I'm really asking is, am I going nuts? No, you're not going nuts. That's the good news. The bad news is that you've been nuts, probably all your adult life. But at least you'll never be boring. We live in an increasingly anonymous society of 320 million Americans. And growing. You should strike out against the one-size-fits-all. It sounds like you're doing a good job of that. So keep fighting the good fight to keep the standards up—even though it's probably a losing battle. Have a great day. ◆

Soroff On / Timothy Hutton

FAR FROM ORDINARY

THE AWARD-WINNING ACTOR REFLECTS ON HIS CAREER, VISITING THE REAGANS AND DATING ANGELINA JOLIE.

HOLLYWOOD ICON TIMOTHY HUTTON STARS IN THE new ABC drama American Crime, which premiered the first week of March. Raised in Cambridge, he won an Oscar, a Golden Globe and a Los Angeles Film Critics Association award for his first major film role, as Conrad Jarrett in Ordinary People, at the age of 20. He has since starred in numerous films, among them Taps, Daniel, The Falcon and the Snowman, Beautiful Girls, Kinsey and The Good Shepherd. His theater credits include Prelude to a Kiss, Babylon Gardens and The Oldest Living Graduate, and his television credits include leading roles on TNT's Leverage and A&E's A Nero Wolfe Mystery, on which he also served as executive producer, director and music supervisor. He lives primarily in upstate New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What separates American Crime from all the other crime dramas on TV?
TIMOTHY HUTTON: It's not a procedural. It's about the people affected by the murder—victims' families and suspects' families.

Biggest crime you ever committed? Jaywalking.

What is your favorite movie of yours? I would say Beautiful Girls.

Wasn't it set in Boston? One of the reasons I wanted to do that movie was that it was going to be shot in Boston. And then the producers said, "We want to absolutely guarantee ourselves that we'll have snow on the ground, so let's go to Minneapolis and do it there because there's always snow." And that year, there was no snow in Minneapolis.

What did they do? These giant flatbed trucks rolled up with cotton rolls, and a lot of the scenes where you see people out and about in the background with snow on the ground, it's actually cotton. And they had snow-blowing machines. It was also the first movie for this guy's new invention using potato flakes. So whenever it was snowing out or there were mounds of snow, it was all potatoes.

Is there a movie you wish you'd never made? Oh, boy. You know, what I love about that question is that it assumes there's only one.

Is there an emerging talent you'd love to work with? So many right now. I can't remember a time in the last 15 or 20 years with such an amazing group of young actors. Two that come to mind are Eddie Redmayne and Chloe Moretz.

Favorite director you ever worked with? If I was forced to answer just one director, which is really hard to do, because Demme, Schlesinger, Polanski, Redford. Bill Condon. John Ridley. So many. Alan Rudolph. Harold Becker. Robert De Niro. But if I really had to pick just one, I'd say Sidney Lumet. I was fortunate to work with him twice, and the way that he prepares a movie is like you're doing a play. You have four weeks of rehearsal. You do run-throughs. You have full dress rehearsals with props before you film anything. You get so connected to the material.

Do you wish you did more theater? Sure. But then again, I probably couldn't have bought my house. Doing theater is not just a completely different way of approaching acting, but the life around it is kind of incredible, too. You do eight shows a week, and most performances are in the evening, except for two matinees, so you have the days for yourself and then you have this event that you get to go participate in. Friends show up, and you go out to dinner afterward. Every night, the feeling of the play, the tone, the reaction to the play is radically different.

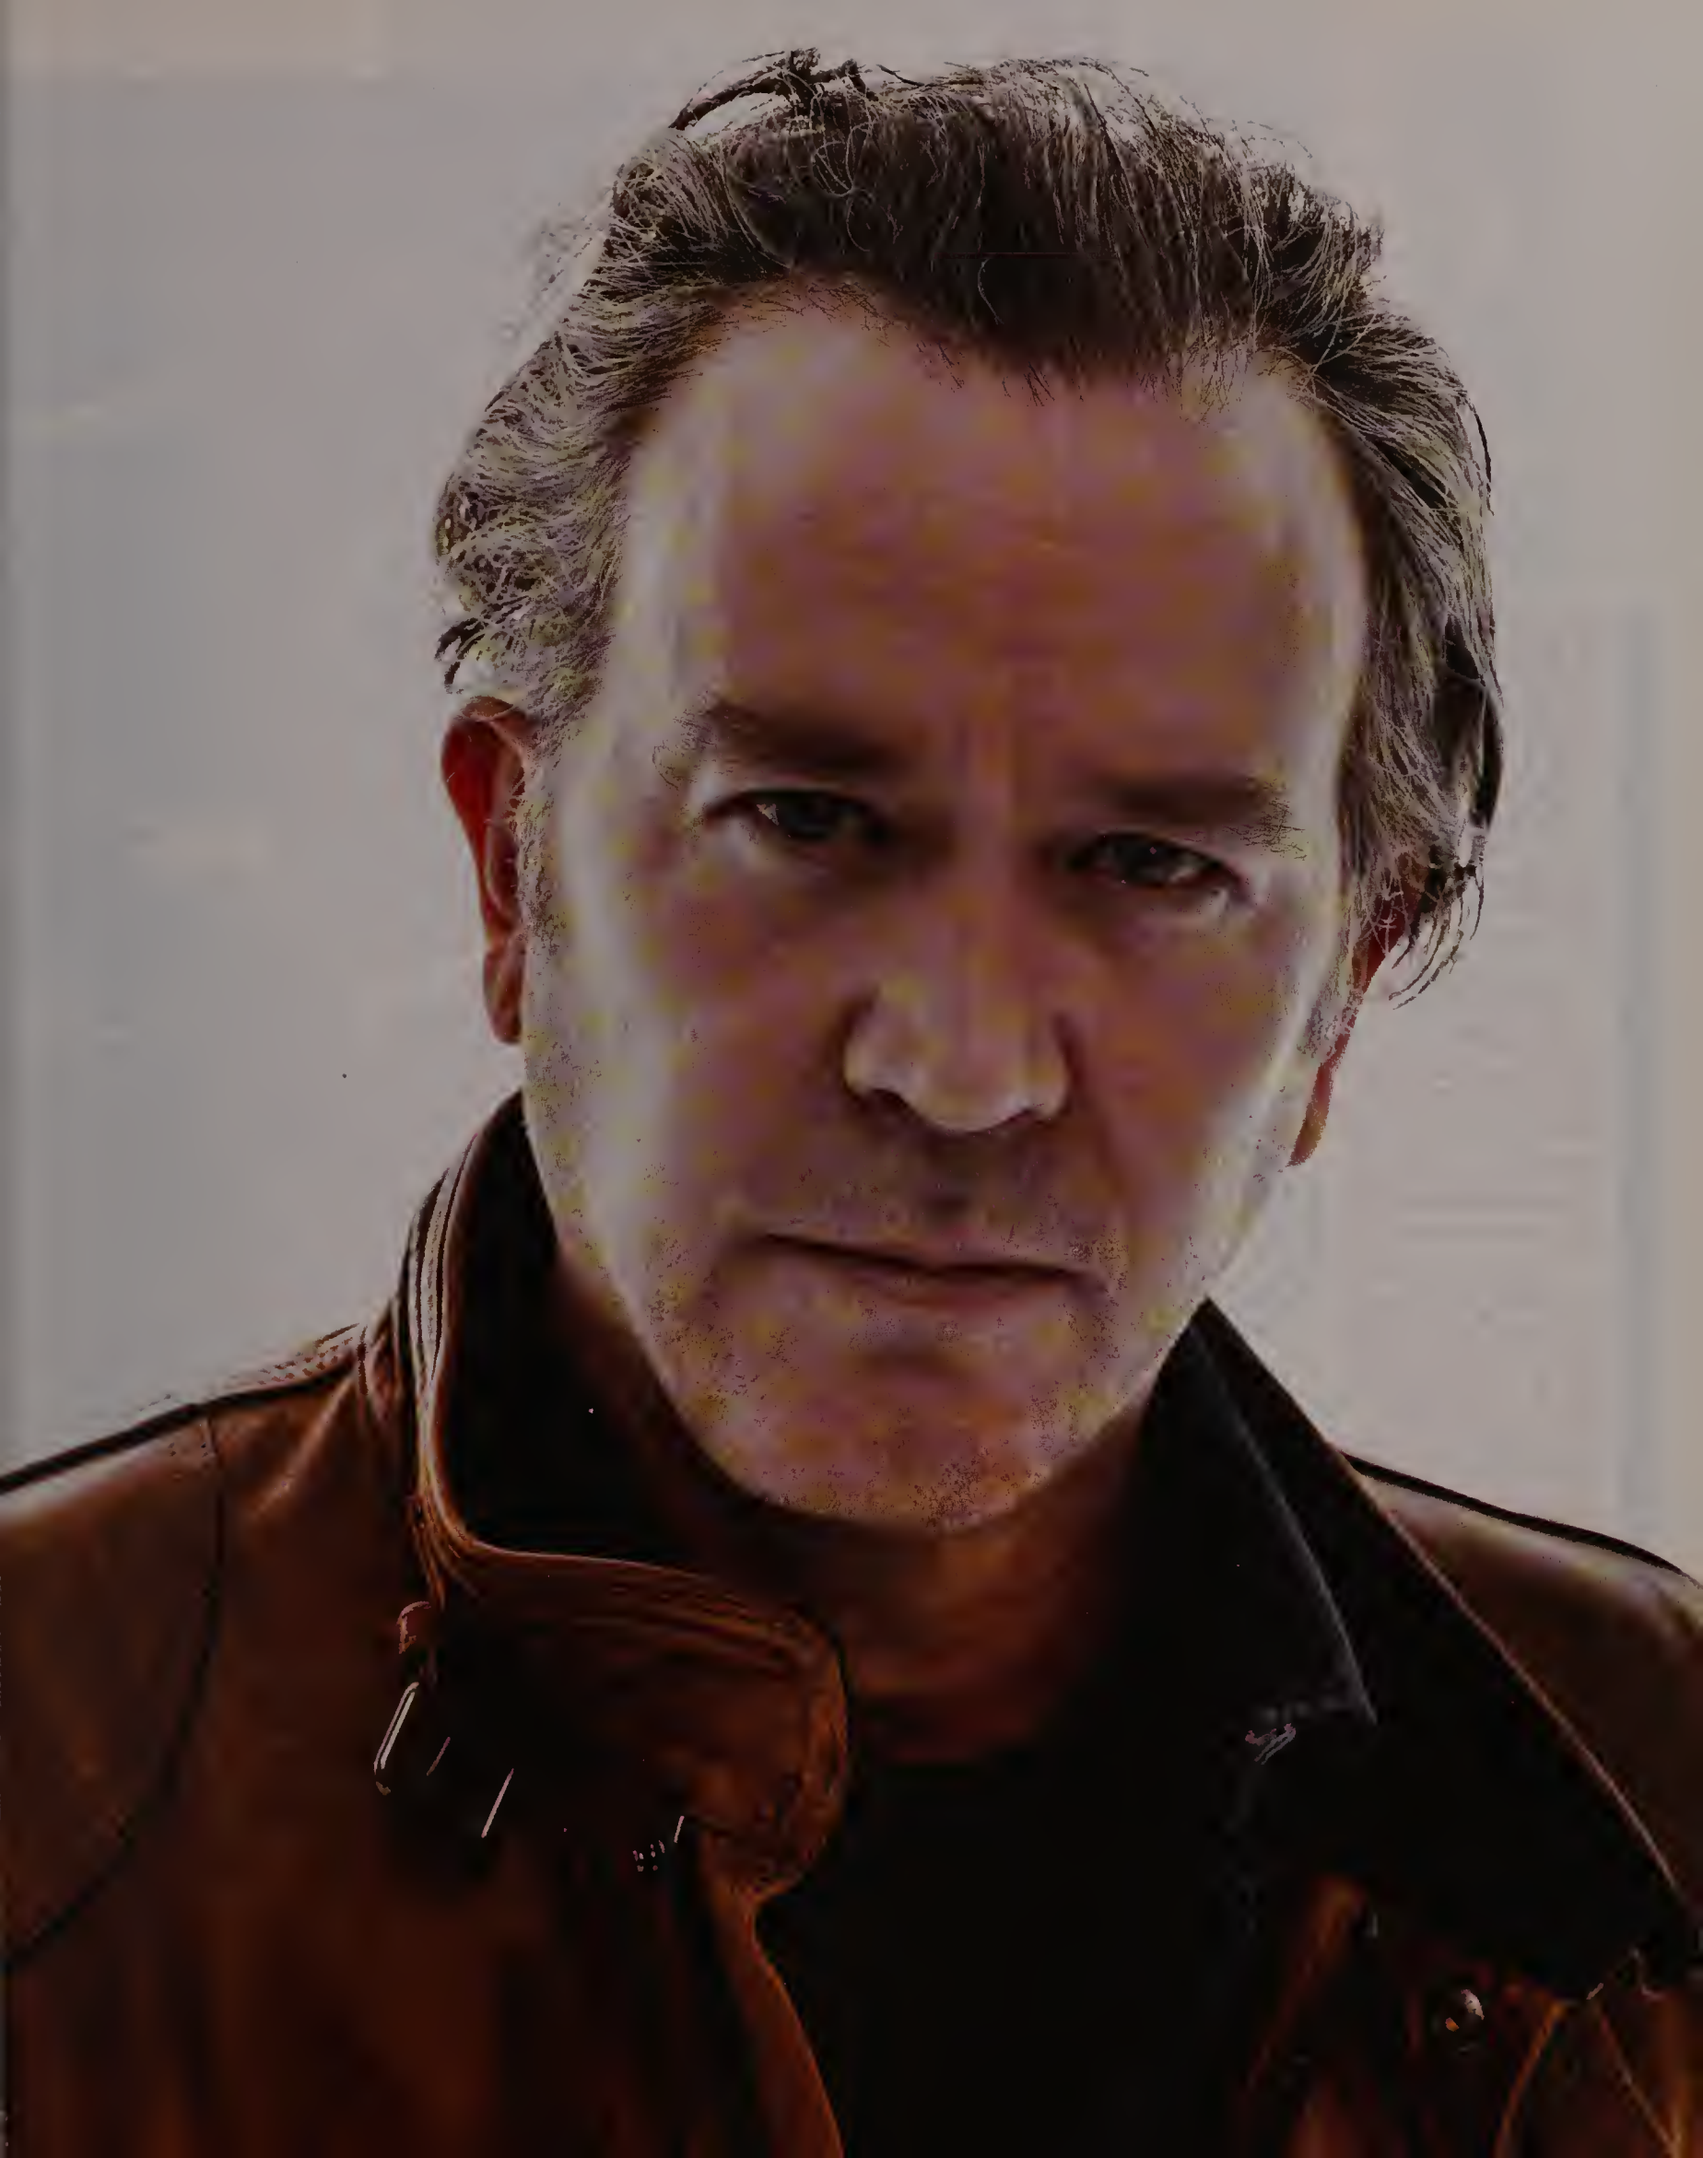
What one thing do you wish you could say to yourself when you were 20? I wish I could tell the 20-year-old self from where I sit now not to think so much. Get out of your head. Not to worry.

How did you escape the craziness of Hollywood? You were 20, had just won Best Supporting Actor... Well, I think the particular circumstances of my life during that time helped ground me because of work. The day after the Academy Awards, I was on the first flight to Philadelphia to begin filming on Taps in Valley Forge, Pennsylvania. I was already well into another character, working with amazing young actors like Tom Cruise, Sean Penn and Giancarlo Esposito, and then there was George C. Scott. I had to be on my game.

"I wish I could tell the 20-year-old self from where I sit now not to think so much. Get out of your head. Not to worry."

Was it uncomfortable to do the nude scene in Kinsey? Well, the most uncomfortable thing is that a film set is usually cold. Yes, there are 75 people there doing their jobs, and they're fully clothed, and you're not. But you just kind of go for it.

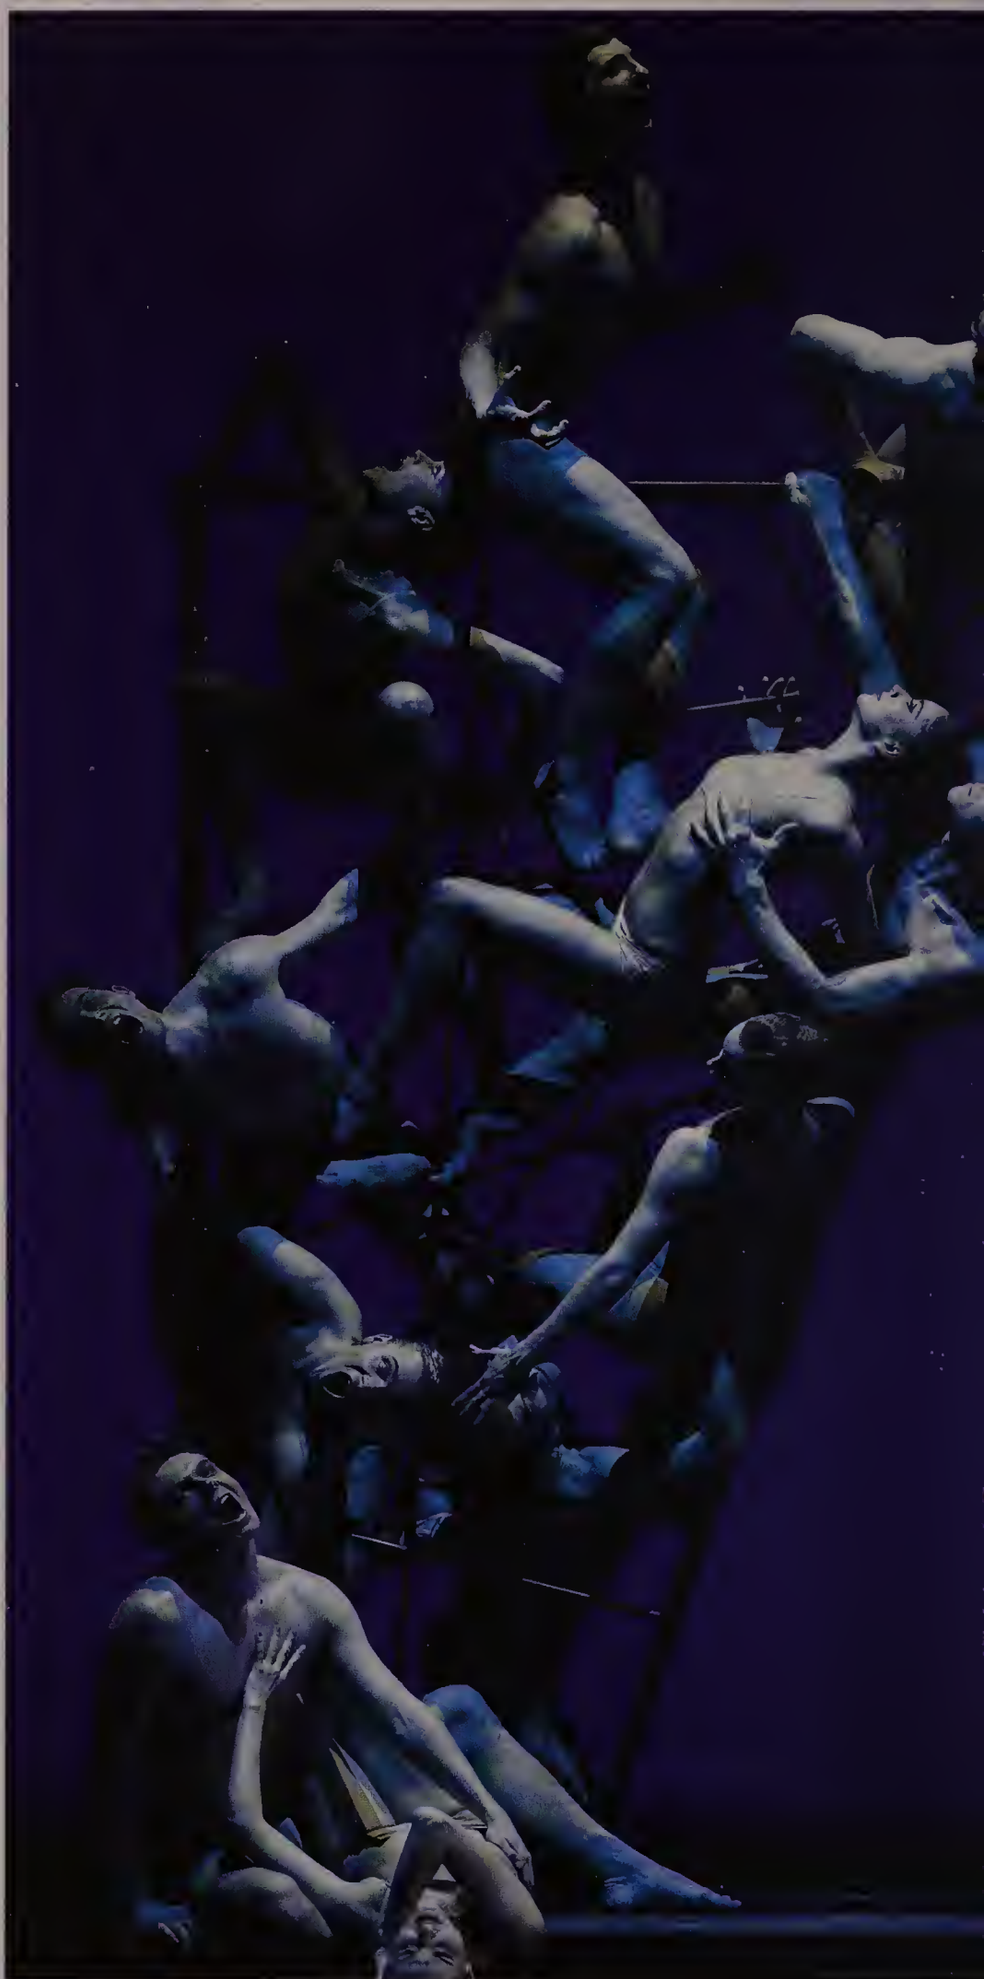
You dated Patti Davis during your 20s. Favorite memory of President and Mrs. Reagan? Well, when she thought it was time to meet Mom and Dad. It was just before he moved into the White House, but he'd just been elected. They had a house up in Bel Air, and there were all these checkpoints to pass through. Finally, we get to the front door, and Nancy answered it. She said, "Welcome, welcome," and showed us into this study with a wet bar. She called out for Ronnie, and he came down looking cool in a white turtleneck and cowboy boots and jeans, and he offered Nancy a drink and asked Patti and me if we'd like a glass of milk. [Laughs.]



What's it like to have Angelina Jolie on your romantic resume? [Laughs.] She's a great person, and that was an incredible period of time in my life.

Favorite thing about Hollywood? At its core, it's really an eccentric town with crazy history. It can be a great place to be when things are going well, and it can be the most isolating place on earth when things aren't.

Thing you miss most about Boston? The snow. Kidding! Everything. I love the city. But what I miss most is my uncle, who passed away from Alzheimer's in November. He was the real rock of our family, an exceptional person. He was a history teacher at Watertown High. John Hayward.



So what's left for you to conquer? Well, everything. There's no telling what it will be, but it'll be interesting to find out. ◆

SPRING LOADED

A preview of THE JAM-PACKED ARTS SEASON ahead! // by The Improper Staff

design by MARNE MAYER // lettering by ALLAN PETERS

LOVE IS IN THE AIR

Two very different takes on romance are taking the stage this spring. First, Saint Petersburg's Eifman Ballet jetés into the Cutler Majestic Theatre on May 2-3 for ROOIN, a retelling of the sculptor's 15-year relationship with mentee, muse and mistress Camille Claudel. Expect dancers to be sculpted into works of art, appear as cancan performers and play patients in a mental asylum—where the jilted Claudel spent the final three decades of her life. // June brings a less tragic look at love as Boston Conservatory grad Anna Reyes settles into the BCA's Mills Gallery for a four-week residency to expand on her recent dance film THE GOOD PARTS OF BEING ALIVE, an exploration of romantic relationships using movement inspired by painter Egon Schiele. On June 26-27, the footage will set the background for performances of the finished product, which Reyes imagines will feature duets playing on a Chinese myth claiming a red thread connects soul mates' pinkie fingers. #Aww.

Rubberband Man

VICTOR QUIJADA left Los Angeles' b-boy scene to train with Twyla Tharp and dance with Les Grands Ballets Canadiens. He's since formed his own company, RUBBERBANDance Group, which World Music/CRASHarts brings to the ICA for a genre-bending show on April 10-11. // Sarah Hagman

What was it like moving to ballet without formal training? I was surrounded by people who graduated from Juilliard, dancers from Sydney Ballet and ABT and New York City Ballet. It just made me want to be as good as them. I guess the competitive nature of hip-hop was driving me. It was one of the toughest things that I ever decided to do.... For a while it meant leaving behind everything that I was good at, the freestyling, the battling, the showing off in hip-hop circles. I was going to start from zero and work my way up.

How has your background influenced your choreography? I had two separate lives. From 9 am to 6 pm I was in the ballet studio, and from 10 pm to 4 am I was out in the clubs being the person that I knew myself to be. But I had to keep those two things separate. In 2000, hip-hop culture was bubbling [in Montreal]. There had been this sort of b-boy renaissance. I reconnected with all of this, and I felt compelled to bring these two realities together.... When we think of breaking, it's so spectacular and so many fireworks, but what more could that accomplish? Could that be sensitive, communicative? Could that tell different stories, human stories?

What can we expect from Empirical Quotient? This show is a sum of many different trials and failures, and experiments and experiences. There are six dancers personifying that. The music is an original composition by Jasper Gahunia, who I've been working with for the past seven, almost eight years. He has formal training from the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto but also was a competitive hip-hop DJ. We've taken the hip-hop approach and set it to different genres of music.

PLUS

BRED IN BOSTON

On April 30-May 10, Boston Ballet brings three contemporary works—all created in Boston—to the Opera House stage in Edge of Vision. Philip Glass and Ravi Shankar's scores power Helen Pickett's reworked Eventide, and Lila York's Celts features Irish footwork with music from the Chieftans and Celtic Thunder. Plus, resident choreographer Jorma Elo premieres Bach Cello Suites.

PDP TRACKS

Local choreographer Caitlin Corbett's latest work, smashnightinfinity, draws on everyday life in seven vignettes—"a collection of fully formed half-thoughts"—set to tunes by the Beach Boys, the Grateful Dead and Judy Garland. It'll join three other pieces, including Flutter (set to Marvin Gaye grooves and made for performers sans dance backgrounds), in New and Recent Work, a program coming to Somerville's Center for Arts at the Armory on April 3-4.

FIRSTS AND A LAST

Celebrity Series brings Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater back to the Citi Wang Theatre on March 26-29 for a number of Boston debuts, including one piece inspired by folk musician Odetta Holmes, plus repertoire mainstays like Duke Ellington tribute Night Creature. It's also a chance to bid farewell to locally raised-and-trained dancer Kirven Douthit-Boyd, who'll be moving on to a position with St. Louis' Center of Creative Arts at the season's end.

COMEDY

Good Genes

When he's not lending his voice to Gene on Bob's Burgers, EUGENE MIRMAN gets his laughs on stage. And April 17-19, his eponymous Eugene Mirman Comedy Festival hits the Shubert Theatre and the Brattle Theatre for six shows, including StarTalk Live! with Bill Nye the Science Guy.

Burrn Notice

Comedian's comedian BILL BURR has become a household name with his specials, podcast and acting gigs on shows like Breaking Bad, not to mention his new Netflix animated series due in December. We caught up with the Canton native in advance of Wilbur Week, which will have him performing 15 shows at the Wilbur Theatre on May 9-18. // Meghan Kavanaugh

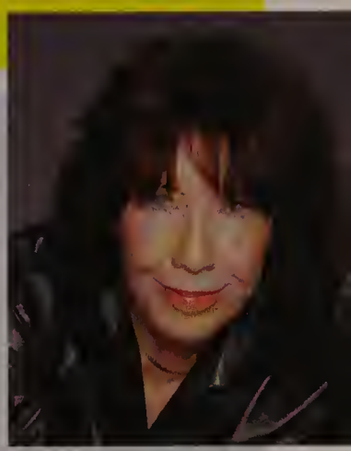
How does it feel to be coming back to Boston from Los Angeles? I just love that part of the country, and I just think everybody back there is so funny individually. There's so many characters that live back there, so to go back there and be able to make some of the funniest people I've ever met laugh is always a special thing.

Packing a theater for 10 days doesn't hurt either. I'm loving stand-up more than I ever have. It's the most fun you could ever possibly have for a job. I love it more every single year, and it's going to be a big thrill for me.

Tell us about F Is for Family. That basically stemmed from telling childhood stories on stage, and whenever I would do it, the only people who would laugh would be other comedians or twisted people in the crowd, so I kind of got frustrated with that and I was thinking...there's got to be a way to tell these things in a way that I can get people to laugh.... I keep a through line of truth, but also kind of soften it by the fact that it's a cartoon.

You're a helicopter pilot in your spare time. Which is scarier, flying or stand-up? As scary as doing David Letterman or Showtime at the Apollo is, or getting ready to do a scene and it's Al Pacino and Christopher Walken, there was nothing scarier than looking at that empty seat and realizing that I was flying the damn thing and if something went down, it was on me to get it to the ground. But I gotta tell you, it's so much fun.



ALL IN THE FAMILY

The Belchers are breaking out of the small screen for BOB'S BURGERS LIVE, a nationwide tour stopping by the Orpheum Theatre on March 28, when the Fox cartoon's voice cast will read scripts, field questions, perform their own stand-up and offer sneak peeks at future episodes.

PLUS

FEMININE MYSTIQUE

Seven looks like a lucky number for the Women in Comedy Festival, whose seventh annual installment will feature more than 100 performers at venues throughout town on April 22-26. That includes three marquee headliners: Glee multihyphenate Jane Lynch, comedy icon LILY TOMLIN and fast-rising sitcom star/creator Cristela Alonzo.

THE GOOD DOCTOR

While Broad City star and on-screen dentist Hannibal Buress is known to get into serious shit during his stand-up (this is the man who brought Bill Cosby's rape allegations front and center, after all), expect him to also riff on the upbeat—pickle juice, anyone?—when he performs five shows at the Wilbur Theatre on April 16-18.

NOTHING'S UP

The mundane may be his lifeblood—Seinfeld was a show about nothing, and his Comedians in Cars Getting Coffee web series is just that—but Jerry Seinfeld can still put on a show. His latest international tour stops by the Citi Wang Theatre for two shows on April 10.

FUNNY BUSINESS

Comedy queen Carol Burnett sits down with her loyal subjects for the audience participation-heavy Carol Burnett: An Evening of Laughter & Reflection on April 19. She'll talk about her career, answer fan questions and no doubt leave Symphony Hall in stitches.

Party Pair

MATT AND KIM just want to have fun. The Brooklyn duo are known for electric live shows, where whimsical props, old-school hip-hop bass drops and the pair's unflagging energy bolster sunny indie-pop. We got Matt Johnson on the line before their April 12 stop at the House of Blues behind their fifth LP, New Glow, dropping April 7. // Alexandra Cavallo

What was the first song on New Glow that you both knew was going to be great? "Hey Now" is the first one we did. We've been really lucky to have a live show that people seem to really enjoy and come back to. The energy we put on stage is way different than what one might consider an "indie" show. We have no problem with putting a Ludacris song right in the middle of one of our singles. So when we were writing "Hey Now," we just needed to get what we do on stage and put it on a record. We were making it at my house, jumping around the room, like "Yes!"

Speaking of your live shows, do you feel a responsibility to be that present and put on a kickass show every time? It's the only way I could see doing it. I've seen bands that are great bands, but the most they're visually into a song is maybe a subtle head bob. I wouldn't be able to play a show like that. If the crowd isn't jumping up and down, or crowd surfing, or whatever, I'm just like, "We should go to the next song. I don't think they're into this."

Do you have any pre-show rituals to psych yourselves up? Kim notoriously has a routine where she has a certain playlist—it involves Beyoncé—mostly hip-hop, high-energy songs that she dances to. And you can't interrupt her. She needs to get through the whole playlist. So basically she's worked herself into a sweat before she even goes onstage.

Your vibe is very youthful, for lack of a better word. Can you see yourselves doing this in 20 years? I don't know! That's a question we've asked. "In 10 years, Kim, could you still be dancing on an audiences' hands?" But how old is Iggy Pop? He's in his 60s? He's still going for it. So I have no idea—I guess it's how long the body lets us do it.

BIG BILLINGS

BELLE & SEBASTIAN
On March 30, the prolific indie-pop titans breeze into House of Blues behind their ninth studio album, January's Girls in Peacetime Want to Dance, the Scottish outfit's first record in five years.

TWIN SHADOW
George Lewis Jr.'s bedroom project turned symphonic synth-pop experience went big for third album Eclipse, layering massive synths with melancholy lyricism. Hear it live at the Paradise Rock Club on April 3.

SPYRO GYRA
A mega-force since the '70s, this Buffalo-bred quintet, which blends pop, R&B and funk into their smooth jazz, is still bringing the noise almost 30 albums later. And they'll bring it to Scullers on April 10 and 11.

HYPER-LOCAL HYPE

The top 3 reasons to stay home next month

1 CAN'T-MISS DOUBLE BILL

SPEEDY ORTIZ + Krill
This April 22 show at the Sinclair is a must on both counts. Speedy's crackling debut, Major Arcana, garnered major critical acclaim (including our 2014 Boston's Best Album award), positioning the band for a buzzed-about sophomore LP dropping this April. And indie breakouts Krill secured an opening slot at May's Boston Calling—catch 'em here first.

2 OPENER WORTH THE ENTRY PRICE

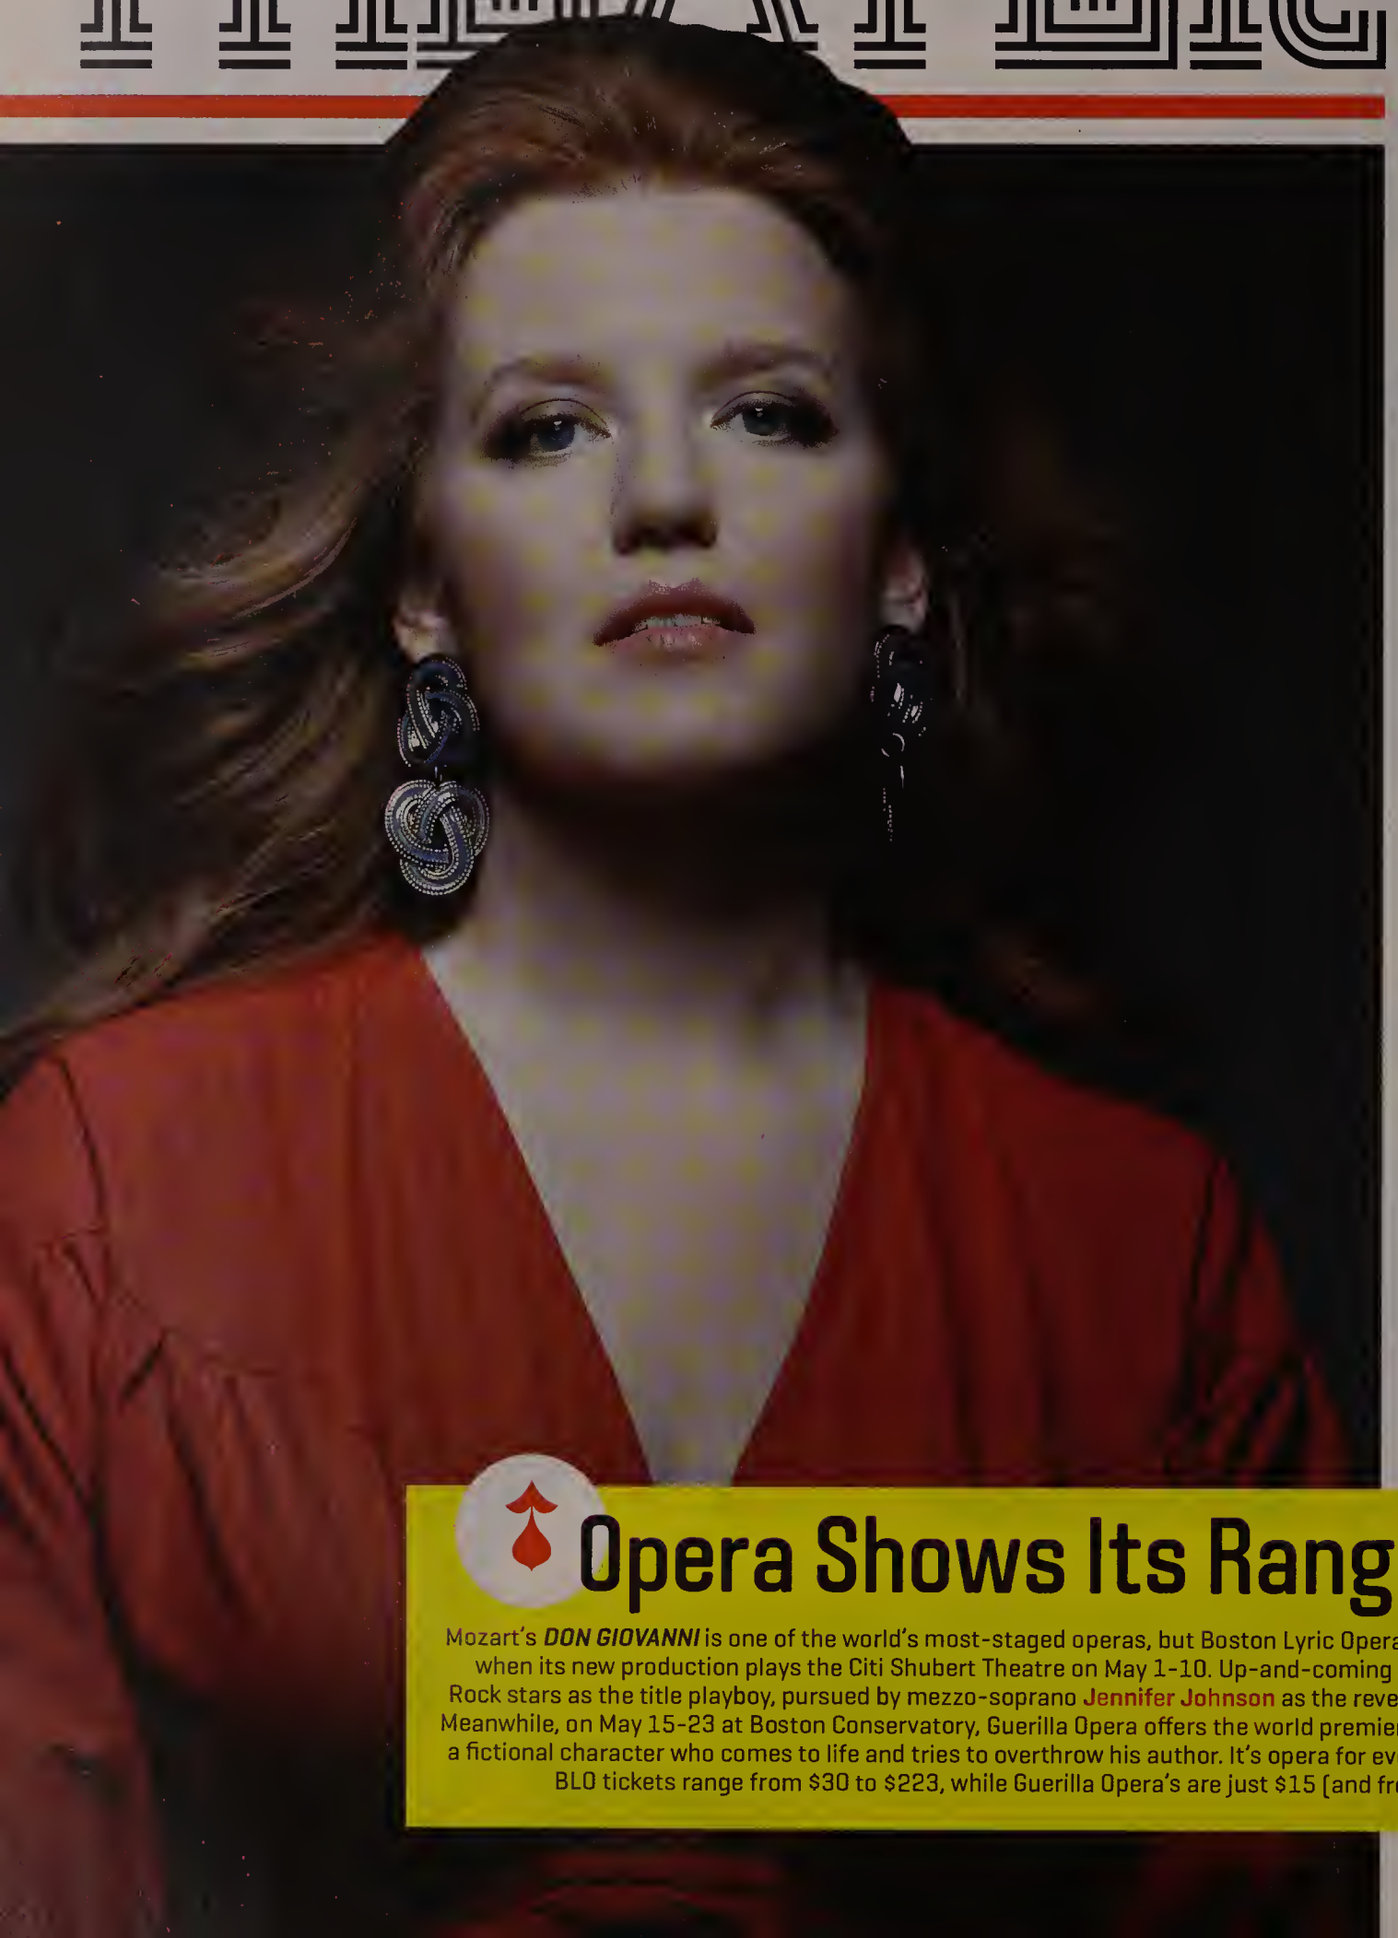
Somos
Believe that the recent "emo revival" is legit or not (it totally is), you've got to admit that local quartet Somos is making the genre entirely its own, with shades of old-skool emo, pop-punk and punk in emotive union. The band opens for Scranton outfit Tigers Jaw (signed to local label Run for Cover Records) on April 1-2 at the Sinclair.

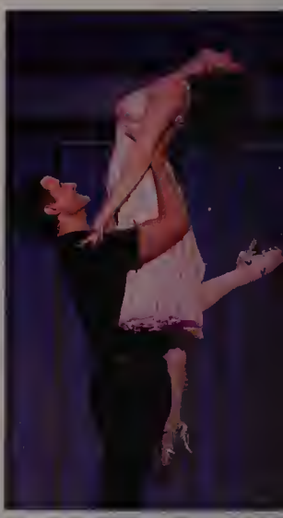
3 CLASSICAL THAT ROCKS

A Far Cry's Tongue in Cheek
Those who think classical music is staid: Think again. The local Grammy-nominated 18-piece chamber orchestra plays up the humor with this program, a "musical roast" that pokes fun at tradition with selections from Mozart, Paul Hindemith and more on April 18 at JP's St. John's Church and April 19 at the Gardner Museum.

NO REST, JUST FEST

ROCK FESTS REIGN SUPREME IN THIS TOWN, but electro-heads can get their fix at TOGETHER BOSTON, a city-spanning celebration of electronic music entering its sixth year. The May 10-17 festival features big names from across the globe—like Germany's Mano Le Tough and Brits Sasha and Scuba—as well as workshops, lectures and demos. // Then Memorial Day weekend welcomes biannual blowout BOSTON CALLING back to City Hall Plaza for its fifth formidable installment. The May 22-24 edition locked in Beck (before his Grammy sweep), My Morning Jacket and local alt-rock pioneers the Pixies as headliners of a killer three-day lineup that includes St. Vincent, Tenacious D, Run the Jewels, TV on the Radio and more. // If you like your festing a little more DIY, get yourself over to Rock City on May 30 for AWESOME DAY FEST, O'Brien's annual beer-b-q rager. This year the all-day fest has expanded to include Great Scott and Wonder Bar, with a heavy-hitting, all-local lineup.





EARL SWEATSHIRT
The Odd Future rapper—whose surprise album I Don't Go Outside, I Don't Like Shit just dropped via iTunes—hits the 'Oise with frequent collaborator/up-and-comer Vince Staples on April 16.

BEN FOLDS
Everyone's favorite cheeky piano-pop king (minus the Five) rolls into Royale on April 24 and the Sinclair on April 25 behind his collaborative LP with NYC instrumental sextet yMusic, dropping digitally this spring.

NOEL GALLAGHER'S HIGH FLYING BIRDS
Noel is obviously the more talented Gallagher brother—just ask him. The notoriously hot-headed former Oasis guitarist flies into the Opera House with his backing band on June 6.

THEATER

BACK IN TIME

There are plenty of ways to time travel from the comfort of a theater seat this season. First up: two standouts set in the 1940 On April 9-12, ArtsEmerso hosts Robert Lepage for h reimagining of NEEDLES & OPIUM, which riffs on art and addiction as New York jazzman Miles Davis and Parisian filmmaker and poet Jean Cocteau visit each other's cities in 194 And from March 27 throug May 2, Lyric Stage revives the former Broadway hit CITY OF ANGELS, a musica that puts a noir spin on the tale of a struggling screenwriter in '40s Hol- lywood. // Skip ahead a fe decades for the 1960s Ne York setting of another musical—this one the be- loved adaptation of an '8 Hollywood favorite—when Broadway in Boston bring DIRTY DANCING to the Citi Emerson Colonial Theatre on April 28-May 10.

Opera Shows Its Range

Mozart's DON GIOVANNI is one of the world's most-staged operas, but Boston Lyric Opera will add some fresh blood when its new production plays the Citi Shubert Theatre on May 1-10. Up-and-coming Aussie baritone Duncan Rock stars as the title playboy, pursued by mezzo-soprano Jennifer Johnson as the revenge-seeking Donna Elvira. Meanwhile, on May 15-23 at Boston Conservatory, Guerilla Opera offers the world premiere of PEDR SOLIS, following a fictional character who comes to life and tries to overthrow his author. It's opera for every taste—and price point: BLO tickets range from $30 to $223, while Guerilla Opera's are just $15 (and free for students).

Last Men Standing

This winter's Snowpocalypse could have been much worse. The proof is in The Last Two People on Earth: An Apocalyptic Vaudeville, playing at American Repertory Theater's Loeb Drama Center on May 12-31. Featuring music ranging from R.E.M. to Rodgers and Hammerstein, the show stars Obie winner Taylor Mac and Emmy and Tony winner MANDY PATINKIN, who chatted with us in advance of the world premiere. // Matt Martinelli

How important is vaudeville to the show? We're using the absolute form of pure vaudeville, meaning song and dance, soft shoes, all those old-fashioned kinds of numbers, the bits and the jokes and stuff.... Our story is about two guys trying to get through the day, and they're continuously interrupted by the weather and trying to figure out how to get around the storms.

How have current events affected the script? On the first meeting, it was right after Hurricane Irene happened. We said, forget nuclear. It's all about climate change and the flood, and the world's washed away and these are the people who are left. We had Taylor coming in on a raft, and Mandy was living in an old vaudeville trunk that had landed on the beach and was half in the sand.

Any reason for choosing the A.R.T.? We both have had wonderful experiences in the past in the Boston area. We're both fans of A.R.T., and they were interested in supporting the development of this piece and inviting us to perform it. They were actually interested in having us do it before it was to the point of fruition.

Do you have any favorite musical numbers from the show? I love them all.... I really ask the audience, as much as they're able, to try not to hear the songs in the context of which they're familiar with. To try to listen to it in this story, in this evening that takes place over this hour and 20 minutes. So that if you hear it, and you know it from some other context, try to say to yourselves, "No, no, no, they're doing this song to tell this story."

LET'S PLAY TWO!

Playwright A. Rey Pamatmat is emphatic: His two plays hitting Boston this spring—Huntington Theatre Company's AFTER ALL THE TERRIBLE THINGS I DO and Company One's EDITH CAN SHOOT THINGS AND HIT THEM—are completely unrelated. Except, of course, that they're both playing at the BCA at the same time. "I wonder if anyone will double feature?" he asks. So do we. The first runs May 22-June 21, the second June 4-27, so there are six days when you could catch both shows. One difference between them: their stage of development. Coming-of-age drama Edith has been in production nearly continuously since 2011, while this is just the second production of Terrible Things, a two-hander set during a job interview that has Pamatmat in a hands-on role. "It's a totally new director and cast," he says. "I don't know if I'm going to do any major changes to the script. I'll just be in rehearsal to make sure they understand everything that's going on."

PLUS

GOOD TIMING
You could follow actor J.K. Simmons' Oscar-night advice to call your mom—or you could bring her to Mothers & Sons, which opens on Mother's Day weekend. A 2014 Tony nominee, the Broadway production starred Tyne Daly as a mother attempting to reconcile with her late son's partner and his new husband; Boston stage vet Nancy E. Carroll fills her shoes in SpeakEasy Stage's version on May 8-June 6 at the BCA's Roberts Studio Theatre.

WONDER WOMAN
If staging a one-woman show wasn't proof of her mettle, there's the subject matter of Alice Manning's Stronger Than the Wind. The former Harvard acting teacher recalls the challenges of caring for her gravely ill newborn son at the Arsenal Center for the Arts, where New Repertory Theatre welcomes her on March 22-April 5.

"THE WORLD'S WASHED AWAY AND THESE ARE THE PEOPLE WHO ARE LEFT."

A Woman of Many Parts

CHRISTINA ZWART'S art demands a closer look. A map of the world, on further inspection, turns out to be made from 7,000 condoms; a beautiful rose reveals a photo montage of road kill. Global Protection and Rosekill will be two of her painstakingly pieced-together installations on view at WHOLE (in part) on April 1-May 3 at Boston Sculptors Gallery. We chatted with the Wayland artist about the big picture. // Jacqueline Houton

What drew you to this way of working? I think it comes from a lifetime of needing to line things up and put things in neat rows and patterns. I just like things to be really organized! It's become a way to have things appear to be one thing from far away and another when viewed up close.

Where do you find inspiration? Every conversation you have, every lyric you hear to a song, everything you see could be the thing that sparks the piece to turn in a different direction. For instance, I originally had a bunch of different titles for my wage gap piece [23, made from 1,400 doctored dollar bills]. The most recent was from this cartoon I'd seen of a man and a woman heading home at the end of the day. The man's got his briefcase and he's hunched forward, and the woman's behind him, hunched forward. He says, "Another day, another dollar," and she says, "Another day, another 77 cents." So, I was going to call it Another Day, Another 77 Cents until.... I was looking at this chart of chromosomes. You've got 22 pairs that do whatever, and then the 23rd pair is what distinguishes your gender. You have XX for female or XY for male. And while I was looking at that chart, the number 23 jumped out at me, because that's exactly the amount that is missing in every dollar bill. It was one of these crazy "eureka" moments.

That piece will have a tie-in at the reception, right? Yes! A couple of my son's classmates started this company called Sweets for Smiles where they make baked goods for nonprofits. I asked them to provide baked goods for the night of the opening, which is April 11. In return I'd have a little table with a donation box, with their logo and a description of what they do, and a sign that says, "Gender equity baked goods: $1 for men, $0.77 for women." Nobody likes politics shoved down their throat. I think it's more interesting and makes more of a point if you can be clever about it. I like to inject humor wherever I can.

ART

CAN'T JET OFF TO THE VENICE BIENNALE?

Us neither. Fortunately, pioneering video artist Joan Jonas, who's creating the installations for the U.S. Pavilion at the art world's biggest biennial bash, is a professor emerita at MIT, and the MIT List Visual Arts Center is treating us to JOAN JONAS: SELECTED FILMS AND VIDEOS, 1972-2005. From April 7 through July 5, the exhibit will showcase seven of the SMFA alum's film and video works, which tackle femininity, fairy tales, sci-fi and ancient sagas.

Made in Japan

Two big exhibits of Japanese art open at the MFA on April 5. HOKUSAI features more than 200 works by Katsushika Hokusai, including landscapes, witty urban scenes and an early edition of Under the Wave Off Kanagawa [The Great Wave], a woodblock print that continues to pop up all over pop culture nearly two centuries after its creation. A different wave prompted the works in IN THE WAKE: JAPANESE PHOTOGRAPHERS RESPOND TO 3/11, featuring 17 photographers' responses to the earthquake, tsunami and nuclear disaster that devastated northeastern Japan in 2011.

WRITING ON THE WALL

Whether they're printed on T-shirts, projected on buildings or blinking on LED signs, JENNY HOLZER's words can stun like a punch to the gut. The conceptual art heavyweight has unsettled viewers for more than 30 years, starting with works like 20 Inflammatory Essays, a series of provocative 100-word manifestos inspired by the ideologies of figures like Lenin, Hitler and Mao, which she printed on posters and anonymously wheat-pasted across Manhattan, stopping passers-by short with opening lines like "What scares peasants is thinking their bodies will be thrown out in public and left to rot." Catch that and other major works (including pieces tapping text from U.S. government documents) at Barbara Krakow Gallery, where the Jenny Holzer exhibit is on view through April 25.

PLUS

A WALK IN THE PARK

The 10-day city-wide Flash Forward Festival closes with a big party on May 3, but the fun doesn't stop there. For the whole month of May, organizers are letting us get some vitamin D along with our art, bringing outdoor photography exhibits to six shipping containers on the Greenway. Some highlights: Gabriele Galimberti's Toy Stories, featuring portraits of kids and their prized playthings from India to Iceland; Angélica Dass' Humanæ, which assigns Pantone colors to subjects' skin tones; and Daesung Lee's Futuristic Archaeology, a surreal look at the impact of desertification on Mongolia, inspired by museum dioramas.

HOLLYWOOD SIGNS

Thomas Hart Benton was famed for romantic paintings celebrating rural life and the common man, so it might come as a surprise to learn that Tinseltown left a big mark on the Missourian's work. Opening June 6, American Epics: Thomas Hart Benton and Hollywood explores how stints in the silent film industry lent a cinematic sheen to Benton's populist paintings, which made him one of America's most popular artists—till Abstract Expressionist shoved realists out of the spotlight. Salem's Peabody Essex Museum will host the first major Benton exhibition in a quarter century, showcasing more than 100 works. Meanwhile, over at MassArt, you can hear directly from another artist who knows plenty about Hollywood: Larry Fink, the photographer behind glam books like The Vanities: Hollywood Parties 2000-2009, who'll stop by as part of the Spring Photo Lecture series on April 21.

OFF THE WALL

With new institutional support, performance art is moving from the margins to the museum floor.

BY Scott Kearnan

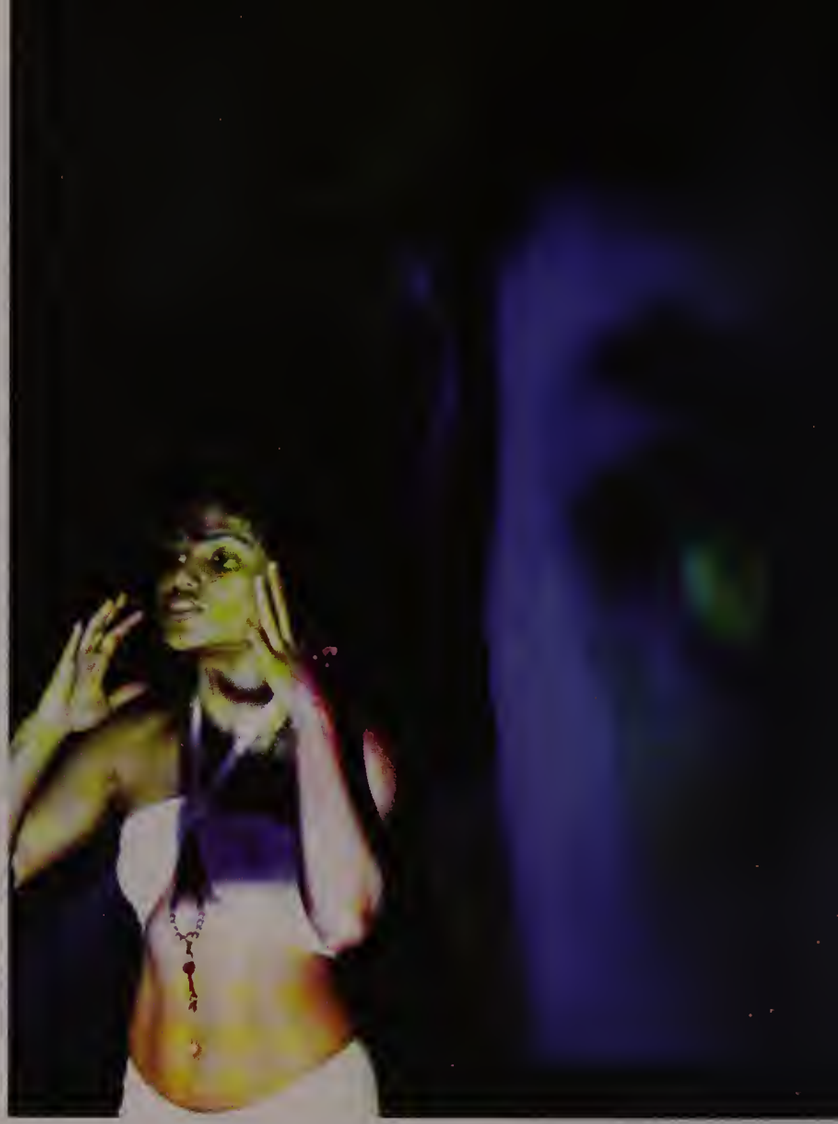
MARILYN ARSEM FRAMES ART THAT can't be hung on a wall.

"It can be a challenge: How do you frame art as an experience, rather than an object?" The slippery answer to that question has long eluded many major American art institutions, Arsem says, and it's the reason why her medium—performance art—has historically struggled to be widely embraced by stateside museums. "In the U.S., art is often viewed as a commodity culture," explains Arsem, who in 1977 founded Boston's Mobius, a seminal performance art organization that offers a home to experiential and experimental work. "There's an idea that you're investing in an object of value, one whose worth will increase the longer you keep it. That goes against the notion of performance art, an experience that disappears once it's over."

Museums are storehouses, but performance art is ephemeral. Experiences can't be collected, archived and displayed in perpetuity. Artists like Arsem reframe conventional ideas of art. And right now, at least, it seems we're more willing to look at them.



In December, Boston's Museum of Fine Arts announced that Arsem would be the first performance artist to receive its esteemed Maud Morgan Prize. (As part of her recognition, she will present a solo exhibition at the MFA later this year.) Around the same time, the Institute of Contemporary Art announced that its 2015 James and Audrey Foster Prize would focus on performance and collaborative art for the first time. (An exhibition featuring the work of its four Foster artists opens on April 21.) Between Mobius and a number of performance art-friendly galleries, like the South End's Samsøn Projects, the medium has enjoyed a vibrant history in Boston. But the MFA and ICA's high-profile honors reflect the conscious intent of two of the Hub's most powerful art institutions to incorporate performance art in their exhibitions.

"We don't consider performance art a separate program, but another medium that artists use. So we're integrating it into our existing structures," says Liz Munsell, assistant curator of contemporary art at the MFA. Since 2012, Munsell has been tasked with steering a new performance art initiative at the MFA, resulting in recent highlights that stand out from the museum's more traditional collections. In June, the MFA hosted Guatemalan artist Regina José Galindo for Big Bang, the live deconstruction of a car that coincided with the five-year anniversary of the auto industry crisis. In November, it welcomed Joan Jonas, a performance art pioneer since the medium's radical 1960s nascence, for Reanimation, an otherworldly synthesis of choreography, visual art and closed-circuit video projections. And on view through April 9 is Sonic Blossom, in which the Taiwan-born, NYC-based artist Lee Mingwei presides over eight opera singers who intermittently engage visitors to serenade them with personal performances of Schubert.

It's too weird! I don't get it! Don't worry, Aunt Mabel. Oil paintings of white guys in powdered wigs are just a few galleries away. But you may want to get used to this.

"Overall, performance art throughout the world is experiencing a major resurgence," Munsell says. Curators and artists point to a variety of explanations, from our hunger for visceral human connection in an increasingly digitized world to the idea that performance art is another manifestation of the larger experience economy. And whether your cultural touchstones are high culture or low, it's easy to see a greater zeitgeist that is even imbuing performance art with some Hollywood-style sizzle.

Take Marina Abramovic, oft-called the "grandmother of performance art," who is now as likely to score headlines in Vanity Fair as in ARTnews. In June, Abramovic presented her first new piece in four years, 512 Hours, during which the artist remained on her feet for 8 hours a day, six days a week, arranging patrons like statues in a silent, stark-white exhibition space at London's Serpentine Gallery. And in Hudson, New York, just over the Western Mass. border, Abramovic plans to launch MAI, a first-of-its-kind art institute and incubator for "durational" (as 512 Hours would be categorized) performance art works. Yet she's also become a celebrity darling during the past several years, whether by escorting frat boy-slash-Instagram artiste James Franco to the Met Gala or playing muse to Lady Gaga, who screened a video she produced with Abramovic at her last album's "artRave" release party. Before you know it, Tilda Swinton is napping in a glass case at MoMA and Shia LaBeouf is—well, doing whatever Shia LaBeouf professes to be doing.

As the art world's renegade outsiders are discovered by the in-crowd, we'll probably see a lot more bad art. (To repeat: Shia LaBeouf.) But it's hard to begrudge if it turns on more casual art patrons to the good stuff, and silences the snickering that even the phrase "performance art" can elicit from less open-minded audiences.

Mobius, now based in Cambridge, has been vital in keeping Boston's experimental art scene buzzing even as other supports, like grant opportunities, have waned over the years—most significantly after 1990, when the National Endowment for the Arts defunded individual performance artists. The limited resources available from nonprofits and other grant-giving organizations are especially difficult for performance and conceptual artists to obtain, says Mobius' current executive director, Daniel DeLuca, 30, because their projects are less likely to fit within the neat categories and parameters demanded by grantors. Last month, Mobius even launched an Indiegogo crowdsourcing campaign to raise $25,000 to "cover operating costs and keep the space running" while a business plan for sustainability is developed.

In art, as in all things, there is a "cycle tied to who has the control over culture."

So it certainly doesn't hurt when performance artists receive the support of major art museums like the MFA and the ICA, where deep coffers offer award monies and hallowed halls provide cultural cachet to a medium that can be dismissed by more traditional tastes. Arsem wonders if the recent willingness by large institutions to more actively engage performance artists is related to a generational shift in power. In art, as in all things, there is "a cycle tied to who has the control over culture," Arsem says, and right now that includes a younger crop of museum curators. Thanks to once-unimaginable digital libraries of decades-old footage and classroom tutelage by performance art vets (Arsem herself was a faculty member at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts for 27 years), a new wave of decision-makers hails from the first generation to have studied a truly experiential-inclusive lexicon of art.

"I do think that a generation of new curators is looking to critically portray the art legacy of the 1960s and 1970s, and ensure that performance art is written into that history," offers Munsell, 32.

"The younger generation was taught this material," adds John Andress, 36, the ICA's associate director of performing arts and co-curator of the Foster Prize. "They're the first people getting into decision-making situations at major organizations to, in some ways, have the entire history of performance art at their fingertips. It's part of your knowledge base. It's in the field as canon. Like painting or sculpture, it's treated as part of art's historical framework."

And for artists themselves, performance art is becoming just another "tool in the arsenal," Andress says. Foster Prize artist Sandrine Schaefer, 34, agrees. Schaefer is a "site-sensitive" artist: Her work responds to the location in which it is staged, even adapting to the unpredictable live variables. (Though she's cagey on details, Schaefer says her Foster exhibition will involve five different performances, including one staged from a pier in East Boston, observed from the ICA's glass-walled harbor-side gallery and live-streamed for "engagement" through computers in the museum's media center.) She is also an adjunct professor at several Massachusetts colleges, and she's been struck by the way performance art is increasingly simply "part of the discourse" for undergrads.

As edges between mediums blur, the current climate also celebrates the kind of multidisciplinary and collaborative artists acknowledged by this year's Foster Prize, like Ricardo De Lima, an artist and DJ whose "transnational bass party" Picó Picante is a monthly institution at the Good Life. De Lima says he uses music, visual art and technology to "create spaces that generate collaboration," and he considers his work more in line with "relational" art, a performance art cousin that builds "community and participation." But he acknowledges that "performative elements in art are experiencing an extraordinary resurgence in popularity. The large institutions are now paying attention."

"Artists have always been ahead of institutions. It's part of the job description," he adds. "Performance art has been flourishing in underground spaces for decades. The institutions are adjusting accordingly."

The evolution will take time. Performance art hasn't struggled for space in museums simply because of curmudgeonly curators or a protracted low tide in the ebb and flow of trends. Logistically, incorporating it is just, well—hard. Artists need visas and hotel rooms. Galleries filled with precious, historic artwork are kept sterile and carefully climate controlled to prevent damage from organic matter. (Munsell recalls convincing conservators to let an artist pump breast milk in a Chinese period room. When Schaefer wanted to bring rocks into the ICA, several offices had to provide clearance.) Performance art is inherently unpredictable; it requires a level of communication and trust between an institution and an artist that doesn't develop overnight. And there are unique questions requiring creative answers. How are spaces kept activated for visitors when artists aren't there? (Schaefer says that between her ICA performances, discreet "traces" of her work will quietly accrue in the exhibition space.) How can ephemeral events be preserved for museum collections? (The MFA will record video footage of Sonic Blossom, says the show's curator, Jen Mergel.)

At least now, though, those challenges are being tackled. And if it's taken a while to get here—well, perhaps that's poignant, says Jed Speare, an artist who spent 12 years as director of Mobius and now serves as director of the multidisciplinary Studio Soto. "I am from Boston, so I am reluctant to say, though it is true, that it is still one of the most conservative and least progressive of the major American cities," Speare says.

"So isn't it fitting that performance art has risen up in prominence here over the past 40 years? In this light, performance art has retained its subversive nature, as a long performance itself." ◆

METRO BOSTON'S COMPETITIVE GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND ALL MALE REVUES

AGENDA for 3/25-4/7

Oh, boys

It's a dance-off!

FANS OF TALENT competitions like American Idol and men in various states of undress should turn off the TV and get down to Club Cafe, where members of Boston's only all-male burlesque troupe, Sirlesque, are hosting Dale's All Male Yardsale, a showcase combining the best of both worlds. Eight amateur male burlesque dancers will vie for a cash prize in an Idol-like competition, judged by the audience and overseen by a panel of seasoned local performers who'll provide colorful commentary. A mere striptease this is not: Burlesque is as much about seducing the audience through showmanship as it is about stripping down to one's skivvies. But, yeah, these gentlemen will do that, too. A night of healthy competition takes (it all) off on March 28. / Alexandra Cavallo

Dale's All Male Yardsale starts at 8 pm on March 28 at Club Cafe, 209 Columbus Ave., Boston. $20, $15 in advance, $25 for VIP seating, clubcafe.com.

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

GOTCHA! What happens when four class clowns from Staten Island grow up? In the case of the Tenderloins, they channel their high school hijinks and love of pranking the crap out of one another into successful careers in comedy. The Tenderloins—Joe, Sal, Q and Murr—are an improv comedy troupe perhaps best known for their truTV hidden-camera show Impractical Jokers, in which the longtime buddies challenge one another to public stunts with one end goal: Humiliate one another for laughs. The New Yawk pranksters roll through town on their "Where's Larry?" Tour, stopping at the Wilbur Theatre on April 3, when they'll perform a mix of stand-up and storytelling, including screenings of never-before-seen hidden-camera clips. / Alexandra Cavallo

BEAUTY IS THE BEAST

Spring is typically the season of positive changes: The sun shines, the grass grows and cute, furry creatures come out of hibernation. But in Justin Benson and Aaron Moorhead's dark romance, Spring, there are more scares popping up than May flowers. When a 20-something American escapes his past by traveling to a picturesque Italian coastal village, he becomes involved with a mysterious and enticing woman harboring a killer secret—she's a genetics student by day and a bloodthirsty monster by night. Watch the love affair take a horrific turn when the temptress' inner demon awakens on March 27-28 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. / Meaghan Leahy

Reviews by Brett Michel

'71 ★★★1/2 British actor Jack O'Connell sure can take a punch. Angelina Jolie put him through a fair share of beatings as a World War II-era POW in Unbroken; now freshman director Yann Demange damages the 24-year-old's handsome face even more in this tense drama. The year is 1971, and U.K. Pvt. Gary Hook (O'Connell) and his regiment have been dispatched to Belfast to help control the deteriorating situation on the streets. Unprepared for the level of violence they encounter, Hook's unit is ambushed in a chaotic riot, and they accidentally abandon him when they're forced to retreat in the face of gunfire. After witnessing the horror of a comrade being executed at point-blank range, Hook barely escapes with his life, and he's forced to survive a terrifying night alone, dodging not only bullets and bombs, but political and military corruption. O'Connell was stone-faced and stoic under the direction of Jolie, but Demange coaxes a raw anguish from the lad that drags you into his painful predicament, making you cringe as he's broken, both physically and mentally. Backed by a pulse-pounding score courtesy of Belfast-born DJ David Holmes, this is a superb directorial debut. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Adieu au langage 3-D (Goodbye to Language 3-D) ★★★1/2 Leave it to the crazy old coots of cinema to be the most playful when it comes to brilliant use of 3-D, shot on a shoestring. First, 72-year-old Werner Herzog gave wonderful depth to some of man's earliest two-dimensional drawings in 2010's Cave of Forgotten Dreams; now, 84-year-old legend of the French New Wave Jean-Luc Godard casts his dog, Roxy, and follows her non-linear journeys through numerous seasons and towns. The stray wanders through the lives of the married Josette (Héloïse Godet) and her single lover, Marcus (Richard Chevallier), as they mostly pass through the frame naked, doing such mundane things as farting while doing laundry or taking loud shits, as when Marcus ponders Rodin's The Thinker while sitting on the can. "Words," Josette says. "I don't want to hear about them." This might be Godard's goodbye to language, but he's fully embraced the possibilities of stereoscopic visuals, doing nearly everything he probably shouldn't, making your eyes do gymnastics as bodies are discovered in fountains, Tchaikovsky plays in fits and starts on the soundtrack and Roxy adds to the feces piling up on screen. She's the real star, and her barks suffice. (At Kendall Square.)

American Sniper ★★★ We've grown used to Bradley Cooper as a comic performer, but director Clint Eastwood recognized something deeper. We first view Cooper's Chris Kyle as he's staring down the scope of his sniper rifle at his target: an Iraqi boy holding a grenade. As Chris trains his sights on this young killer, who can't be more than 7 or 8 years old, Eastwood cuts to Chris as a child in Texas, shooting a deer during an inaugural hunt with his dad. "That was one hell of a shot," Wayne Kyle (Ben Reed) tells his son. "You got a gift." That gift leads Chris to become a Navy SEAL. Called for service on the day he weds Taya (Sienna Miller, strong in an underwritten, weepy role), he heads for a solitary honeymoon in Iraq, where his bullet will rip through that grenade-wielding child's chest. This will stand as the first of an unmatched 160 confirmed kills across four tours of duty, earning Chris the nickname "The Legend," as Cooper subtly projects the effects of PTSD. While the adaptation of Kyle's autobiography has taken heat as an endorsement of 'Merica's war machine, this is Eastwood at his most apolitical, no matter what chair he prefers talking to. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Chappie* (No Stars) The poster for filmmaker Neill Blomkamp's third film proclaims, "Humanity's last hope isn't human," which demonstrates that I wasn't alone—the marketing people behind Chappie didn't know what the hell this film is about, either. One thing they did get right? The sticker slapped across the scalp of the titular rabbit-eared robot that reads "reject." Blomkamp opens his Johannesburg-set, deeply stupid pastiche of RoboCop, the dumb Short Circuit and the dumber Transcendence with documentary-style talking heads, a la his breakthrough, District 9. Anderson Cooper (playing himself) marvels about the world's first robotic police force, one of whom is destined to become the sentient Chappie (voiced by District 9's Sharlto Copley). Blomkamp promptly abandons this format, focusing on the inception of this artificially intelligent (umm...) droid—which remains a secret through the film's overblown finale. The public shouldn't be aware of Chappie's existence, and frankly, I'm envious. Instead, we witness this mechanical progeny of Jar Jar Binks as he's reared by rap-rave group Die Antwoord. That's right: The movie stars adults who call themselves names like "Ninja," while relegating Sigourney Weaver and Hugh Jackman to supporting roles. "Chappie hate you!" the idiot-bot yells at one point. Not as much as I hate this movie. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Cinderella ★★★ Disney guaranteed audiences would show up for director Kenneth Branagh's live-action remake of their 1950 animated hit by preceding it with a 7-minute mini-sequel to the 2013 animated smash Frozen. But like most follow-ups, this short is a letdown. So, how nice that the main event is such a pleasant surprise. While not a musical retelling (sure to disappoint some Disneyphiles), it's nevertheless a worthy tribute. Starring Downton Abbey's Lily James as the would-be princess, this latest in Disney's recent spate of flesh-and-blood reconfigurations of its animated classics features a standout performance by Cate Blanchett as a more modern interpretation of Cinderella's stepmother, Lady Tremaine. Unsurprisingly, she attempts to stop her stepdaughter from slipping her perfectly fitting foot inside the famed glass slipper and winning the heart of her Prince Charming (Game of Thrones' Richard Madden). What is surprising, however, is that Tremaine is the only woman in the kingdom not to try on the crystalline pump. A cultured woman hoping to provide stability for her family, and she doesn't even try to claim a place as the new queen? This is a fairy tale! (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Danny Collins ★1/2 "The following is kind of based on a true story," reads the onscreen text at the start of this maudlin mess of a movie, before it's qualified with the words "a little bit." Al Pacino embarrasses himself more than usual as the title character in the directorial debut of screenwriter Dan Fogelman, who pulls double duty as writer of this shameless treacle, which follows his script for Last Vegas, a film that offered crummy roles for no less than Robert De Niro, Michael Douglas, Kevin Kline and Morgan Freeman. Fogelman's nothing if not consistent. Danny Collins is an aging 1970s rocker who wears a girdle while croaking his signature hit, "Hey, Baby Doll," which sounds like a song Neil Diamond might have come up with, but nothing at all like something penned by the inspiration for Collins, British folk singer Steve Tilston. Like Collins, though, Tilston did discover a handwritten fan letter from John Lennon nearly 40 years after it was sent, but it's here that reality ends and Fogelman's schmaltzy fiction begins, prompting Collins to "embark on a heartfelt journey," according to the press notes. Don't believe it. Not even a little bit. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Fifty Shades of Grey ★1/2 Although Dakota Johnson is certainly admired by director Sam Taylor-Johnson's camera in this adaptation of author E.L. James' BDSM fantasy, nudity is rarely this unerotic. Johnson's virginal Anastasia Steele interviews 27-year-old billionaire Christian Grey (Jamie Dornan) for her college paper; then he shows up at her part-time hardware store job, seeking rope, tape and cable ties, prompting her to wonder if he's a serial killer. If only. Previously, Dornan was best known for playing a multiple murderer in the BBC series The Fall, but he's the real stiff here. "I'm not the man for you," Christian eventually tells the lovestruck Ana—and it's hard to argue with him, since Dornan and Johnson's onscreen chemistry is nil. Johnson does have comic chops, though this film isn't the laugh riot I expected, so those chops are mostly wasted. Ana herself gets a bit wasted in a bar before drunk-dialing Christian—but what college-aged girl would phone anyone? It's a texting culture, something James would know if she were interested in capturing believable interactions, rather than presenting a dominant/submissive relationship that would make actual BDSM practitioners turn red—not from a good spanking, but from embarrassment. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Focus ★★1/2 This love story between two professional liars and cheats might leave you feeling conned, especially after such a promising first half. Will Smith brings a lot of charm to his role of master thief Nicky, but it's Margot Robbie as Jess, his new protege, who steals the movie. Co-writers and co-directors Glenn Ficarra and John Requa (I Love You Phillip Morris) lay most of their cards out when they place Nicky in a car with Jess as Noel Harrison sings "The Windmills of Your Mind" on the radio. This Oscar-winning song was the theme of 1968's The Thomas Crown Affair—and Ficarra and Requa wish their movie could be half as entertaining as the Boston-set heist classic. But for a while, it is. Nicky and Jess meet-cute in New York, and their week-long con games/love affair in New Orleans lead up to the Super Bowl. A tension-filled sequence at the big game finds the two in an escalating gambling match with B.D. Wong's Liyuan, and the payoff is huge. But then, abruptly, the words "Three years later..." appear onscreen, and you feel like your pocket's been picked. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Kingsman: The Secret Service ★★★ Matthew Vaughn reinvigorated Marvel Comics' X-Men for the big screen in 2011's X-Men: First Class, a period piece where he demonstrated an affinity for the swinging '60s, in addition to the command of action filmmaking and editing he'd displayed in 2010's Kick-Ass, his violent, entertaining deconstruction of the modern superhero movie, based on writer Mark Millar's comic book series. Now, Vaughn and regular collaborator Jane Goldman have freely adapted another Millar comic book, 2012's The Secret Service. Although set in the present, this affectionately winking, post-modern take on spy films aims squarely at the James Bond franchise, specifically the 1970s movies, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart. He recruits "Eggsy" (newcomer Taron Egerton), who was Olympic material before he dropped out of the Royal Marines and into a life of petty crime. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Hart tells the lad, and he's not kidding—the designer suits Eggsy's outfitted with are as bullet-proof as his ammunition-firing umbrella, and they'll be needed for all the over-the-top action and carnage ahead. If Bond's upper lip has grown too stiff for you, Eggsy's new breed of spy is bound to raise a few eyebrows. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel ★★ Director John Madden won't be winning any Oscars for this follow-up to his 2011 hit, The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel. However, he and his screenwriter, Ol Parker, should be given credit for their honesty—their sequel certainly is the second best in this series. Without a novel to work from (the first film was based on Deborah Moggach's These Foolish Things), Parker builds his script around the goodwill that audiences have for these characters. However, the absence of Tom Wilkinson's Graham is deeply felt, and bulking up the supporting roles of returning cast members—Ronald Pickup and Diana Hardcastle as Norman and Carol, Celia Imrie as Madge—can't make up for this hole, especially when they're provided with sitcom-style plots. MVP Maggie Smith provides the film's backbone as Muriel; as the newly installed co-manager of the hotel, alongside Dev Patel's Sonny, she's the glue that holds everything together, even if few of the pieces quite fit. Judi Dench and Bill Nighy also bring their immeasurable charms back to their roles of Evelyn and Douglas, but new hotel guests Guy (Richard Gere) and Lavinia (Tamsin Greig) feel like exactly what this film is: filler. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Song of the Sea ★★★★ You know those remarkably stylized animated end credits that are a Pixar specialty? The sequences that appear to be handcrafted, unlike the hyper-realistic computer-generated wonders that preceded them? If you're lucky enough to have seen director Tomm Moore's Academy Award-nominated The Secret of Kells, then you're aware that entire feature films can be hand-animated in a similar style. Now Moore is back, five years later, with his latest Oscar-nominated animated masterpiece. Based on the Irish legend of the selkies—seals that transform into humans while on land—Song of the Sea tells the tale of 6-year-old seal-child Saoirse. She and older brother Ben escape their grandmother's house in the city to return to their father and dog in their lighthouse home by the sea. Pursued by an owl witch, they discover a world of magic and uncover untold secrets of their past. Featuring the voices of Brendan Gleeson and Fionnula Flanagan, this charming picture offers a wonderful alternative to computer-animated fare, with music by composer Bruno Coulais (Coraline) and Irish band Kila that only adds to the enchantment. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Two Days, One Night (Deux Jours, Une Nuit) ★★★★ Belgian brothers Jean-Pierre and Luc Dardenne's newest masterpiece focuses on Sandra Bya (Marion Cotillard in an Oscar-nominated performance), a woman who has a single weekend to convince a majority of her 16 co-workers to save her job—by forgoing their 1,000 euro bonuses. The Dardennes typically feature nonprofessional actors and follow their protagonists from behind, but here, working for the first time with an international star in a lead role, they capitalize on Cotillard's deeply expressive face, downplaying her natural beauty and finding a fractured psyche within her eyes. In placing their unflinching gaze squarely on the face of a seasoned pro, the Dardennes have captured one of their most naturalistic performances yet. They also capture a harsh truth: Most of Bya's co-workers aren't selfish, but simply struggling to get by, like so many are. And we witness this, time and again, as the Dardennes are steadfast in showing us each of Bya's encounters with them. Not nearly as depressing as it sounds, the film reveals some of the best and worst of humanity, but it's the kindness and generosity that you'll remember—and the changes of heart that don't come frequently enough. KIDDING AROUND You may have first heard Oregon-born troubadour Mat Kearney on the soundtrack of teen soaps like One Tree Hill, The Vampire Diaries and Friday Night Lights or adult ones like Grey's Anatomy. But Kearney's been a hip-hop fan since high school, and while his major-label debut found fans with radio-friendly (and TV-friendly) songs, it also included tracks that showcased Kearney's rap skills. Nine years later, his latest album, Just Kids, builds on that eclecticism. Released last month, it mixes romantic themes and easy melodies with reggae and hip-hop as Kearney raps about married life and hometown nostalgia. Hear both sides of the now-Nashville-based artist's sound when he hits the House of Blues on March 25. / Meaghan Leahy

This is certainly true in the world of fashion, and the reason we created a new digital LOOKBOOK. Now everyone can see what The Studio is all about... beautiful clothes. Just outside Boston, in the heart of Brookline's Coolidge Corner, The Studio has kept pace with the capricious world of fashion for 36 years and was described in Oprah's "O" Magazine as "a Comfort Zone."

Recently, a customer discovering The Studio for the first time bemoaned missing The Studio's first thirty-six years and vowed not to miss the next.

Edited by Sarah Hagman

STRING IT ON Sometimes a picture is worth a thousand notes. Take Guitar Heroes: Photographs from Behind the Six String, a new exhibit featuring images from a dozen shutterbugs, including locals Ron Pownall, Rowland Scherman and Leslii Stevens, whose shot of blues singer/songwriter Kenny Wayne Shepherd is shown here. Capturing the energy of live performances, the exhibit features rock-star portraits of legends like Bruce Springsteen and the Rolling Stones, which share the spotlight with snaps of lesser-known guitarists playing on the street and in tucked-away bars. Rock 'n' roll on over to Panopticon Gallery, where the exhibit is on display through June 9. / Kate Joseph
